BLACKWOODS' NEW BOOKS

Suited to the most varied tastes.

The Letters of Warren Hastings to his Wife (15*s.* net). These Letters, transcribed in full from the Originals in the British Museum, are introduced and annotated by SYDNEY C. GRIER, whose works on the East are well known.

Colonel HUGH PEARSE'S The Hearseys (15*s.* net) is the history of a well-known Anglo-Indian family which gathers up the romance of English rule in our great Dependency in the East. It is told by the author of that romantic volume 'Memoirs of Alexander Gardner.'

Mr. A. C. NEWCOMBE'S Village, Town, and Jungle Life in India (12*s.* 6*d.* net), a charming volume of especial interest at this moment in view of the Royal Visit. The critics generally are agreeing with an authority in the DAILY MAIL, who said that the book 'will be read with avidity by all who have been in India or are in any way interested in that great Eastern possession.'

In Japanese Hospitals during War Time. By Mrs. RICHARDSON (crown 8vo. illustrated, 6*s.* net). Mrs. Richardson was the only foreign lady whose services were accepted by the Japanese in their military hospitals, and she has written this book at the request of the Japanese Red Cross Society.

CHASSEUR'S Study of the Russo-Japanese War (6*s.* net) comprises the brilliant series of papers so eagerly read while appearing in 'Blackwood's Magazine.'

Sportsmen and naturalists always welcome an animal book if it is written with knowledge and enthusiasm: and such is Mr. RICHARD BELL'S My Strange Pets (6*s.* net). Never was there such a collection of strange fowl, and four-legged creatures and creeping things, as Mr. Bell keeps in his Scottish home and has brought into these pages. This book is a 'mine of information, suggestions, and stories,' says the SPECTATOR, and all the other reviewers are of the same opinion.

A new volume by Mr. ALFRED NOYES is, Mr. R. C. Lehmann says, an event of importance to all lovers of poetry. The book he refers to is called The Forest of Wild Thyme (5*s.* net). 'In future years,' Mr. Lehmann continues in his review of it in the BOOKMAN, 'Mr. Noyes may attack enterprises of great pith and moment in poetry, but . . . he will not easily or often surpass what he has now done in this exquisite poem.'

The Rake's Progress in Finance (2*s.* net), by Mr. J. W. CROSS, Author of 'George Eliot's Life,' is a warning to the nation. The first review in the SCOTSMAN says that at least it should quicken the apprehension of men as to the danger that threatens the nation in its finance.

The Siege and Capitulation of Port Arthur. With Illustrations and Maps. By ELLIS ASHMEAD BARTLETT (demy 8vo. 21*s.* net). The Publishers regret that this book has had to be delayed, and cannot now be issued until after Christmas.

Life of John Collingwood Bruce, LL.D., D.C.L. By his Son, the Rt. Hon. Sir GAINSFORD BRUCE, D.C.L. (10*s.* 6*d.* net).

'WITH THE NIGHT MAIL.' By RUDYARD KIPLING.

CHRONICLES IN CARTOON.

THE BEST GIFT BOOKS.

THE SAUCIEST BOY IN THE SERVICE. 5s.

By GORDON STABLES, R.N.

ABERDEEN JOURNAL: 'The name of Dr. Gordon Stables on the title-page will be enough to decide many a boy who is allowed to choose his own Christmas book. The Doctor's new yarn is a "ripper," and no mistake.'

THE VINLAND CHAMPIONS. 5s.

By OTTILIE A. LILJENCRANTZ.

BRITISH WEEKLY: 'Boys will revel in "The Vinland Champions," a tale about the Vikings; exciting up to the end.'

THE WHITE ROOF-TREE. 3s. 6d.

By ETHEL TURNER.

LEICESTER POST: 'It is a charming picture of young life, painted as the authoress knows how to depict it. She has a fresh and tender touch indeed, which has singled her out as the happy successor of Miss Alcott, and won for her the golden opinions of her juvenile readers. Her charming new story cannot but multiply her young friends, and enable them to pass many more delightful hours under the witchery of her spell.'

THE STORY OF THE GRAVELYS. 3s. 6d.

By MARSHALL SAUNDERS.

DUNDEE ADVERTISER: 'One of those quiet, tender, and beautiful things that make a fragrance in the memory.'

FOR MURIEL'S SAKE. 3s. 6d.

By L. E. JACKSON.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS: 'A thoroughly healthy and interesting story, with some charming glimpses of boyhood and girlhood, which young and old alike will read with avidity.'

ANDY. 3s. 6d.

By LUCILE LOVELL.

KEIGHLEY CHRONICLE: 'One's mind goes back to the stories of Little Fauntleroy to find a parallel to the same charm and grace as that with which Miss Lovell narrates the doings of "Andy."'

The Children Won't be Happy till They Get It.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S

WONDER BOOK

A PICTURE ANNUAL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

Crown 8vo. picture boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 5s.

Last year the WONDER BOOK made a stir in play-rooms and nurseries the wide world over. Nothing like had ever been seen before; nothing like has ever been seen since—except the second year's issue, now ready, which puts the first quite in the shade. It is in the daintiest of covers, and contains

300 OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS PRINTED IN VARIOUS TINTS.

256 Pages of Brightly-written Stories, Articles, and Verses adapted for Children of all Sorts and Ages.

IMPORTANT FICTION.

FIRST LARGE EDITION EXHAUSTED ON SUBSCRIPTION.
SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

AYESHA: The Return of 'She.' 6s.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

With 32 Full-page Illustrations by MAURICE GREIFFENHAGEN.

BYSTANDER: 'One of the weirdest and most thrilling stories ever written. The reader who sets out to follow the fortunes of the seekers of "She" should take care that he has no important work on at the time, for he will not lay the book down until he has read it from cover to cover.'

A MAKER OF HISTORY. 6s.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

BLACK AND WHITE: 'As a writer of sensational stories, Mr. Oppenheim will bear comparison, not only with himself, but with the most ingenious of his contemporaries. Indeed, in my opinion, he is the most admirable inventor and solver of mysteries now writing in England. In "A Maker of History" his many talents have full play.'

THE PILLAR OF LIGHT. 6s.

By LOUIS TRACY.

EVENING STANDARD: '"The Pillar of Light," by Louis Tracy, is so admirable, so living, so breathlessly exciting a book. The magnificent realism of the lighthouse and its perils, the intense conviction of the author, brings the very scene he pictures before the reader's eyes with hardly a line of detached description; the interest of the terrible dilemma of the cut-off inhabitants of the Pillar are worthy of praise from the most jaded reader.'

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GARDEN OF LIES' &c.

TOMMY CARTERET. 6s.

By JUSTUS MILES FORMAN.

BIRMINGHAM POST: 'Rarely do we get a novel of such high quality and powerful dramatic interest as this.'

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'DR. NIKOLA,' &c.

FOR LOVE OF HER. 5s.

By GUY BOOTHBY.

DAILY TELEGRAPH: 'Mr. Guy Boothby's name on the title-page of a novel carries with it the assurance of a good story to follow. In the confection of tales of exciting adventure he is not excelled by any novelist of the day.'

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION READY SHORTLY.

MRS. BEETON'S BOOK OF HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT.

Strongly bound in half-roan, 7*s.* 6*d.*; half-morocco or half-calf, 12*s.* 6*d.*: tree calf, 18*s.*

In the book world, no less than in other phases of our complex modern life, it is frequently a satisfaction to witness 'the survival of the fittest' in the scheme of evolution. When the same reference books and works of counsel and advice are bought up by ensuing generations of readers to the tune of some million copies, it is pretty clear that 'the fittest' has really 'survived' all competition. Such a volume is 'Mrs. Beeton's Household Management,' of which nearly a million copies have been sold. Here is a work which several generations of good housewives have declared indispensable to the well-ordering of a home. The new edition now issued has been revised throughout and brought completely into touch with modern requirements by experts of special authority. It contains 2,300 pages (about 600 more than the last edition), including hundreds of new photographic illustrations and many new coloured plates.

NEW TYPE. NEW ILLUSTRATIONS, NEW COLOURED PLATES. NEW RECIPES.

By W. G. ASTON.

With 14 Illustrations Reproduced from Japanese Wood Engravings. 8vo. 6*s.* net.

This treatise is chiefly intended as a repertory, for the use of students, of the more significant facts of Shinto, the old native religion of Japan before the introduction of Chinese learning and Buddhism. The materials have been principally drawn from the older Japanese literature, which gives a tolerably complete picture of this religion as practised from the seventh (and doubtless long before) to the eleventh centuries of the Christian Era.

This is a New and Enlarged Edition of the Letterpress of the Volume in the 'English Historical Series,' issued by Messrs. GOUPIL & CO., with numerous Illustrations, in 1902.

ST. GILES'S OF THE LEPERS. By EDWARD C. W. GREY. Crown 8vo. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

The writer of this book, who is just dead, worked for thirty-four years continuously in the London parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields. In his Preface he says: 'Yet even as I write St. Giles's is rapidly changing. Modern buildings are springing up and streets are disappearing, while the Kingsway will obliterate some notable landmarks. This is another reason for recording the fast vanishing historical features of our time-honoured parish.'

SEA POWER IN ITS RELATIONS TO THE WAR of 1812

BY

Capt. A. T. MAHAN,

D.C.L., LL.D.

'His works have become the text-books of Emperors and Presidents. . . . He writes with an authority unrivalled.'—MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

'There are writers who have such a mastery of their subject that a reviewer can but approach them with bared head. Mahan is beyond all challenge a member of that inspired company. Each fresh treatise on strategy which his pen sends forth to the world is seized on alike by professional reader and civilian, by reviewer and general public, not as a book whose merits await judgment, but as the teachings of a master to be received and laid to heart reverently. To British students of strategy Captain Mahan's new work, "Sea Power in its Relations to the War of 1812," is of special value.'—MORNING POST.

'The subject is treated in a lofty and scholarly manner. A notable contribution to the history of that great war and its environment . . . welcome alike to seamen and to scholars.

ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

'Conclude a work of monumental proportions. . . . Characterised by that laborious exactness, judicial and dispassionate reading, and elaboration of detail which distinguish all the author's writings.'—BIRMINGHAM POST.

'Of great interest to the Empire.'—OUTLOOK.

IDOLATRY OF THE EDITION.

'THE Booklover's Leaflet' is the title which Messrs. Pickering & Chatto give to their interesting and modest little fortnightly list of scarce and valuable books. Number 66 Haymarket is, we hope, well insured, for if Messrs. Pickering's premises contained nothing but the more than 800 volumes mentioned in this '149 and 150' list, their destruction would probably be called a literary calamity.

Of the hundreds of rare works mentioned in this exceptionally interesting list—exasperatingly attractive list—we have space only to refer to a few.

Our amiable contemporary, The Author, had some accounts of literary ghosts recently—this kind of ghost is an author, generally unknown, who, in legal phraseology, devils for another author known, but too busy to write all that he gets paid for writing. The Author would, we think, be interested in a work published in 1729 by Iscariot Hackney, entitled

'AN AUTHOR TO BE LETT,'

'being a Proposal humbly address'd to the consideration of the Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, and other wonderful and weighty members of the Solid and Ancient Society of the Bathos, by their associate and well wisher,' the aforesaid Iscariot, Esquire. From this title and dedication it looks as if the author had what our forefathers and foremothers called 'a pretty wit.' Unfortunately these seventeenth and eighteenth century wags too often exhausted their wit in their title-pages.

It is a very curious fact, if the Baconians are right, that the published works of Bacon are of mighty little value as compared with those he did not publish—at least under his own name. Here are Messrs. Pickering offering all sorts of rare first editions of the 'Novum Organum,' 'Sylva Sylvarum,' 'Advancement of Learning,' 'Essays,' &c., for a few pounds, whereas they ask nearly three thousand pounds for a few second, third, and even fourth editions of his 'Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies,' written under the pen-name of Wm. Shakespeare.

On the other hand, those who think that Shakespeare was neglected and rarely referred to by writers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries will find much to interest them in Messrs. Pickering's bibliography, as they have made a point of mentioning, in apparently hundreds of cases, when a writer refers directly or indirectly to Shakespeare.

Of John Chalkhill's 'Acilia,' &c., Messrs. Pickering offer 'The most complete copy recorded,' for £85, published in 1613, and containing the 'earliest known reference to Izaak Walton in literature.' Walton was born in 1593. This item also contains Marston's 'Pigmalion' 'written professedly to ridicule Shakespeare's 'Venus and Adonis,' and Marlowe's 'Hero and Leander.'

No. 6,929 is an item (priced at £25) so scarce that Warton doubted its existence: George Chapman's 'Georgicks of Hesiod,' 1618, published by Miles Patriarch, near St. Dunstan's Church.

No. 7,022, John Davies' 'Scourge of Folly,' published about 1611, is interesting as containing an epigram addressed 'To our English Terence Mr. Will Shake-speare'; and for the same reason Dekker and Webster's 'West-Ward Hoe,' 1607.

Dr. Donne's 'Poems,' published by Walton's friend and publisher, John Marriott in 1635, seem to be rising in value—priced here at ten guineas.

Michael Drayton, beloved of anglers for his 'Poly-Olbion,' is represented by a copy of that work (£25), and the first edition of his 'Battaile of Agincourt,' &c., in which he refers to Shakespeare as having—

> 'As strong conception, and as cleare a rage
> As any one that traffiq'd with the stage.'

Among the H's we notice George Herbert's 'Wits' Recreations' (£36); Herrick's 'Hesperides,' first edition (£68), and Holinshed's 'Chronicles of Englande, Scotlande and Irelande,' 1577 (£85), with the illustrations and folding map of Edinburgh.

In the M's there is 'an edition of the utmost rarity, if not unique, hitherto unknown to all bibliographers,' of 'Hero and Leander' begun by Christopher Marlow and finished by George Chapman, published in 1622 (£40). A first edition of John Marston's 'What you Will,' 1607 (£16 16*s*.), in which he quotes as a 'play scrappe,'

> 'A horse, a horse; my kingdome for a horse.'

After Maxwell and Massinger we come to a £425 item under Milton, viz. first editions of 'Paradise Lost' and 'Paradise Regained.'

From among the P's you may, if it is not already sold, 'Purchas his Pilgrimage' for £85; and the 'Returne from Parnassus,' 1st Edn. (£18 18*s*.).

Then we come to such an array of editions of Shakespeare 'Folios' as we do not remember to have seen in a second-hand book catalogue, no less than four copies of the SECOND FOLIO edition, ranging in price from £200 to £350; then two copies of the THIRD FOLIO, one priced £750 the other £375; then five FOURTH FOLIOS from £135 to £210. Messrs. Pickering believe the latter to be 'one of the finest in existence.'

In addition to the above there are early editions of 'Othello' and 'Romeo and Juliet,' at £150 each.

After Shakespeare we refer to Shirley, whose 'Six New Playes' are offered for £28, because in his Prologue to 'The Sisters,' published in 1653 (the year of the 'Compleat Angler'), he says:

> To Shakespear comes, whose mirth did once beguile
> Dull hours, and buskins, made even sorrow smile
> So lovely were the wounds, that men would say
> They could endure the bleeding a whole day.
> He has but few friends lately, think o' that
> Hee'l come no more, and others have his fate.

But 'Our Pleasant Willy,' as Spenser called him in 1591, had come to stay, and so has Spenser; and a copy of his 'Fairie Queen,' second part, 'clean and unwashed,' is priced at £220.

Almost the only book which can compete with these, for their lucky owners, golden argosies of the English literary world is Walton's 'Angler,' which may be worth anything up to five hundred pounds.

Was it by a pure accident that Messrs. Pickering & Chatto end this bibliography of 'Rarities' with a copy of 'Don Quixote' for 3*s*. 6*d*.? What would the Knight have said of this idolatry of the edition?

AN ANNOUNCEMENT FROM OUR CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

From our Illustrated Christmas Number which is rapidly going out of print, we borrow the following announcement, and can add to it that The Publishers' Circular, Ltd., has now been Registered and over £7,000 of capital subscribed for, or more than was required.

'We take advantage of this our Illustrated Christmas Number to wish our readers, and all connected with the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record the good old-fashioned time-honoured wish for

and

and we are glad to be able to inform them that The Publishers' Circular and the annual and other volumes of The English Catalogue of Books will be taken over on January 1, 1906, by a small company, which includes some of the leading publishers and booksellers: Mr. John Murray, Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., Messrs. Cassell & Co., Mr. W. Heinemann, Mr. John Menzies, Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith, Mr. George Allen, Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Sons, Messrs. Higginbotham, of Madras, &c. The Directors are Mr. Edward Marston, Mr. Hubert H. Longman, Mr. A. H. Hallam Murray, Mr. R. B. Marston, and Mr. Henry W. Keay, President of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland, who will represent the bookselling interests on the Board. It is not proposed to make any change in price, but it is hoped that various improvements will be gradually introduced with a view to making the publication still more valuable to its thousands of readers—chiefly the leading booksellers of our Empire, American and foreign booksellers, and librarians.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. Murray has been entrusted with the publication of the Life of the late Duke of Argyll, which has been edited by the Dowager Duchess. The first part consists of a full and carefully prepared autobiography. In this are recorded the Duke's early years, his parentage and childhood, his surroundings and studies, especially in science and natural history, in which he afterwards became a recognised authority. Succeeding to the title in 1847, he at once began to take an active part in politics, and in 1853 was admitted to Lord Aberdeen's Cabinet as Lord Privy Seal. As his knowledge of passing events becomes more direct and personal, we read the Duke's reminiscences of his colleagues and of the many distinguished persons with whom he was brought in contact. The record of what passed in the Cabinet both before and during the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny will be deeply interesting to all students of our history, and will afford much new light on the true narrative of these events. With the Mutiny the autobiography, which was written in 1897 to 1900, ends, and the remainder of the Life is derived from the Duke's diaries and his correspondence with all the leading personages of his time. Those who are acquainted with 'The Philosophy of Belief' must have remarked the charming autobiographical passages introduced into that work, and will have formed an idea of the attraction which the complete record is likely to present.

Mr. Heinemann announces for immediate publication an important volume, very fully illustrated, entitled 'New Egypt,' by A. B. de Guerville, who describes his journey from Alexandria to Fashoda, and his impressions on matters political, social, financial, religious, historical, &c.

Mr. Unwin published last Monday a book which ought to be full of interest—viz. 'The Memoirs of Dr. Thomas W. Evans,' the celebrated American dentist, who lived in Paris most of his life, and was acquainted with most of the chief persons and events of the Second Empire. His account of Louis Napoleon is a revelation.

It is an ill wind which blows nobody any good, and although we greatly miss Longman's Magazine, it is a consolation to find that in consequence of its, we hope, temporary retirement we get now, instead of a monthly, a weekly instalment of Mr. Andrew Lang's notes, entitled now 'From the Sign of Saint Paul's,' in that oldest and best of weeklies the Illustrated London News.

'Hatchard's Christmas Number' of 'Books of To-day' is a handsome budget in the brightest cover of the season—you can almost warm your fingers at it. Let us hope that we may see some of Messrs. Hatchard's fair and fashionable customers moving gracefully over the ice, in bright frosty weather, like the girl of the period on 'Books of To-day.'

China-collectors often find a difficulty in remembering the marks of the various china-manufacturers. Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. are about to issue the eleventh edition of Mrs. Palliser's 'China-Collector's Pocket Companion,' a neat and handy book giving full information and approximate dates of the chief manufacturers both in this country and on the Continent.

The issue of the Autocar for the 16th inst. will contain a special report of the Paris Automobile Show.

A special feature of the December number of the British Empire Review (the official organ of the British Empire League) is an article by Admiral the Hon. Sir E. R. Fremantle on 'The Royal Commission on Food Supply.' The special reviews, by General Sir Richard Harrison and Admiral C. C. Penrose Fitzgerald respectively, of Captain Mahan's 'Sea Power in its Relations to the War of 1812' and 'The Life of Nelson' are also worthy of mention.

Messrs. Cornish Brothers, of Birmingham, have sent us their charming little Catalogue of Christmas Books, illustrated with many coloured pictures. It is most seductive, and will doubtless fascinate and draw a host of customers to 37 New Street, Birmingham. There is one feature about it with which we cordially agree, and that is the abolition of full-points and all other points except where the sense of a passage makes them quite necessary. On a title-page, for example, a great black blot at the end of a line is a positive disfigurement as well as wholly useless.

We have received No. 1 of Northern Notes and Queries, the new quarterly magazine devoted to the antiquities of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, and Durham, which we announced a few weeks ago. It is edited by Mr. H. R. Leighton, and makes a good start; but why was a foggy grey cover selected? One can with difficulty read the contents on a November day, and when advertisements come advertisers will object to it. We hope the editor will be able to give, later on, some photographic reproductions of Druidical and Roman remains.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

We are glad to hear that the tickets for the dramatic entertainment in aid of the B. P. S. at St. George's Hall, on Thursday evening next, December 14, have been very well taken up. Mr. Larner, secretary of the society, 28 Paternoster Row, will be glad to hear at once from any who may wish to be present who have not yet got tickets to prevent disappointment.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE LILLIE CRAIK.

Mr. George Lillie Craik, of 2 West Halkin Street, for forty years a partner in the publishing firm of Macmillan & Co., died on October 25, leaving a fortune of £92,478., with net personalty £91,685. He directed his trustees to allow his interest in the publishing firm of Macmillan & Co. to remain with the firm at their discretion.

CHARLES LAMB.

The Life of Charles Lamb. By E. V. Lucas (Methuen).

When a bookseller is asked, as he is sure to be, 'What is the best book of the year?' we think that he will be quite justified in replying 'It is Mr. Lucas's "Life of Charles Lamb."' In confirmation of this opinion we are glad to see that Messrs. Cornish Bros., of Birmingham, give Mr. Lucas's book the premier place in the very tasteful catalogue of new books which we have just received. Mr. Lucas has done what all lovers of Lamb have long been waiting for, and the result is well worthy of the subject.

> 'And did you once see Shelley plain?
> And did he stop and speak to you?'

says Browning, and after reading Mr. Lucas's book we can truly say that we have seen Charles plain, and that we, as it were, have spoken face to face with him. He died seventy-one years ago next month, but yet to those of us who, so far as age is concerned, could easily have known Barry Cornwell, Coventry Patmore, Crabb Robinson, Clara Novello, Mrs. Moxon, and Mrs. Edward Fitzgerald, he seems almost within hand-shaking distance, and Mr. Lucas's book makes all the old familiar faces more familiar still. There is no English author whom we know intimately as Charles Lamb, thanks to his autobiographic habit; and to many of us there is no English author whom we so like to know. Independent of his writing we find in his story that most pathetic concurrence of tears and laughter that is so supremely characteristic of him in life. To praise Lamb as a writer is superfluous, and to praise him as a man is beyond our province. Wordsworth did it once for all,

> 'O, he was good, if e'er a good man lived!'

We must thank Mr. Lucas for gathering up all the scattered references to Charles and Mary Lamb, and amalgamating them with the pre-existing material. The result is a book which has a fair claim to rank with the great biographies of our men of letters. Boswell's 'Johnson' and Lockhart's "Scott' stood alone in the first rank till Sir G. Trevelyan's 'Macaulay' enchanted us all, and we venture to think that our much-loved 'Elia' will now join the ranks of the immortals associated with the name of Mr. Lucas.

HELPFUL ADVERTISING.

Advertising directly to the trade is nowadays recognised as the surest and best method of introducing new lines and pushing standard numbers. This system followed up by progressive travellers and backed by goods of merit tells the tale of success. This is all based upon the correct argument that the retailer is the 'king of the business,' and the first necessity is to get the goods on his shelves. Display cards and numerous other accessories are willingly furnished by progressive manufacturers to aid in the sale of their goods at retail. This co-operative spirit does the work.—Canadian Bookseller and Stationer.

MESSRS. DEAN'S LATEST.

We do not know how far Messrs. Dean consider it wise in their own interests to go in the way of making their unrivalled rag toy books indestructible. The riddle of the Times is—

'When is a net book not a net book?'

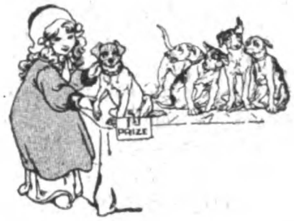
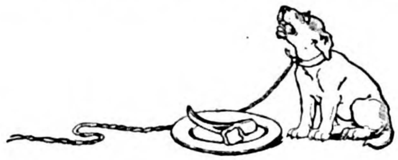
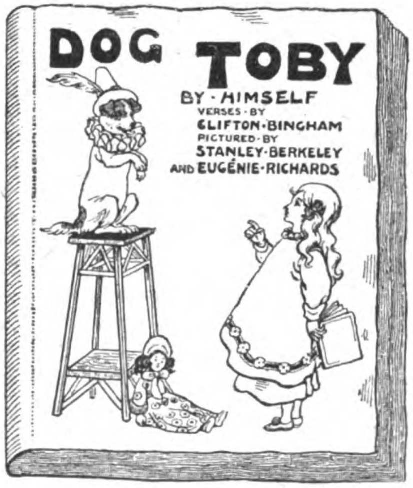
Answer. When it has been dropped into a lady's bath.



Now Messrs. Dean assure us that their productions are washable as well as indestructible.

So presumably 'Dog Toby,' the most recent and best of their capital books, may be taken into his bath by his young owner. If this is so, Messrs. Dean will become even more popular in the nursery, for, as far as our experience goes—and it is a sevenfold one—a toy which will not stand washing with its owner is not really loved, though it may be respected. But apart from all other considerations, 'Dog Toby By Himself' is certain to be a prime favourite in all British nurseries, and it deserves an extra cheer for being all British manufacture. The colouring is capital, the drawing delightful, and Toby tells his tale in a taking way that will please small people as well as older boys and girls—say up to ninety-nine.





In the evening of his days Toby says:—

> 'I lie within my kennel now,
> And think of days gone by,
> And how the world has altered since
> A puppy small was I.

BOOKS, LIBRARIES, AND LITERATURE IN DAYS OF OLD.

The following extracts are from a long and most interesting lecture by Mr. Richard Cameron, F.S.A.Scot., the well-known secondhand bookseller, of Edinburgh, who, despite the fact that he is over eighty-two years of age, delivered it in the most spirited manner. The occasion was the opening of the thirteenth session of the Edinburgh Booksellers' Assistants' Association on the evening of Thursday, October 26, in the Protestant Institute, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh.

Jamie Catnach.

In England, chap book literature was also in great request, and in a number of English towns millions of copies were printed and widely circulated. In more recent times, one great purveyor of such literature was James Catnach, of Seven Dials, London. His productions were in many respects different from the ordinary Scottish chap books. He had a most extensive trade in sensational broadsides suitable for sale in London thoroughfares, when newspapers were few and high priced. When anything barbarous or horrible occurred, a great trial for murder, a celebrated execution, or, in fact, anything that was likely to cause a thrill of horror, Catnach's place was besieged by crowds of street hawkers who were anxious to receive supplies, with, it might be, the last dying speech and declaration of a criminal, who by his deep-dyed villany had created a profound sensation. Of such broadsides immense quantities were disposed of. Jamie Catnach, as he was called, was never particular as to the kind of types he used in his broadsides. He is said to have had a great aversion to buying new type, and his workers had just to take what came first to hand, whether large or small, capitals, lower case, or italics, and it may be imagined that a broadside so printed would really be a curiosity. While the compositor would be setting up the type, Catnach himself would carve out the illustration on the back of an old music-plate, and by nailing it on a piece of wood make it ready for the press. It may also be noted that at one time Catnach kept a fiddler on his premises, and used to receive ballad writers and singers. In order to judge of the merits of such productions as were offered he had the effusions sung to popular airs, and played over by his own fiddler, so that the street ballad singer who listened might be enabled to start with the new ditty.

Since Jamie Catnach's day a new and brighter era for cheap literature has dawned upon the country, by means of which all such trash as emanated from the Catnach press shall be superseded and finally perish.

Many other interesting particulars were given in regard to rare old books and literature, such as Caxton's printing, and especially the famous Gutenberg Bible, the first book printed from metal types in the year 1450.

The meeting was brought to a close by votes of thanks to Sir John M. Clark, Bart., who occupied the chair, and to Mr. Richard Cameron, the lecturer.

A GLASGOW POET AND BOOKSELLER.

We regret to have to record the death of Mr. Alexander McLaren, bookseller and stationer, of Messrs. Alexander McLaren & Son, booksellers and stationers, 360 & 362 Argyle Street, Glasgow, on Thursday, November 30, at the age of fifty-nine years. He had been ailing for some time, and had been removed to the Royal Infirmary for an operation which promised relief, but it was found that the inward trouble had gained too great a hold, and he passed away four days after admission, having suffered considerable pain for some time.

He established himself in the stationery trade over thirty years ago, and the bookselling business was added some years after. He was one of those members of the profession who are something more than mere traders, his love and enthusiasm for all kinds of literature was an inspiration to many customers, who liked nothing better than to have a chat about favourite authors. He could also claim some little title to authorship himself. In 1889 he published his first volume of verse, entitled, 'Heart Breathings, or Songs of Twenty Years,' and among other smaller works, a pamphlet, 'Scottish Poets and English Critics,' which gained favourable notice from press and public. He also contributed several long series of prose articles to the press of his native town of Kilmarnock, notable among these, 'My City Windows, and Beyond,' full of the literary associations of the surrounding country. Mr. McLaren took a deep interest in all temperance and broad religious movements, and as a prominent lay member of the Unitarian body he at various times has officiated in most of their churches in Scotland, and was also a frequent lecturer. He leaves a family of six, and a wide circle of friends, both in private and business life, to testify to his intense regard for business integrity, and sterling value as a true friend. The business will be carried on as usual by his family. Mr. David McLaren informs us that his father looked forward eagerly to the arrival of the Publishers' Circular on Saturdays.

Important Copyright Case.

By permission of the Times we give the following extracts from its issue of December 6, which contains a full column report of this important case.

The plaintiffs in the action were the two well-known firms of publishers, Macmillan & Co. and Smith, Elder & Co. The defendant was also a publisher of repute, trading as J. M. Dent & Co. The question raised by the action had reference to the right to publish sixteen letters written by Charles Lamb to one Robert Lloyd between the years 1798 and 1810. On October 9, 1830, Charles Lamb made his will, and thereby appointed Mr. T. N. Talfourd, afterwards Judge Talfourd, and Mr. C. Ryle his executors, and after certain provisions in favour of his sister, Mary Ann Lamb, and in default of appointment by her, he gave the residue of his estate to Miss Emma Isola and in the event of her death to her children. Lamb died on December 27, 1834, and his will was proved on January 16, 1835, by both the executors. Ryle survived Talfourd and died intestate. Mary Ann Lamb died without having exercised her power of appointment under the will. Emma Isola married Edward Moxon, the publisher, and died intestate on February 2, 1891, and her son, A. H. Moxon, took out letters of administration to her estate. On January 31, 1905, A. H. Moxon took out letters of administration cum testamento annexo de bonis non to Charles Lamb, and on February 7, 1905, A. H. Moxon assigned all his rights in the sixteen letters in question to the defendant. The actual letters had found their way into the hands of a Mr. and Mrs. Steeds, and on March 5, 1895, Mr. and Mrs. Steeds sold the copyright in these letters for £250 to Smith, Elder & Co., and lent them the manuscripts to be copied for the purpose of publication, and they received back the letters from Smith, Elder & Co. after they had been made use of. On November 10, 1898, Smith, Elder & Co. brought out a book called 'Charles Lamb and the Lloyds,' in which these sixteen letters appeared, having been reproduced from the letters lent by Mr. and Mrs. Steeds for that purpose. In 1899 a license was granted by Smith, Elder & Co. to Macmillan & Co., accompanied by a promise not to give a similar permission to any other publisher. At the end of 1899 Macmillan & Co. published Canon Ainger's edition of Charles Lamb's letters containing the sixteen letters in question. On November 6, 1902, the defendant, being desirous of producing an edition of Lamb's letters, wrote to Smith, Elder & Co. asking for permission to include these letters in his edition, but on November 11 Smith, Elder & Co. replied that they were unable to comply with his request as they had already given exclusive permission to another firm. In the early part of 1903 a traveller of the defendant's brought to his knowledge the fact that some original letters of Charles Lamb were in the market, and on inquiry it turned out that these were the letters now in question, which were being offered for sale by Steeds and his wife. The defendant therefore entered into an agreement with Steeds for the purchase of the letters, and on May 9, 1903, he paid him £250 for the sixteen letters, together with some other letters. Steeds had previously informed the defendant of his assignment of the copyright in the letters to Smith, Elder & Co., and the receipt given to him on May 9 was expressed to be for the letters and also for any rights which he might still have therein. Towards the close of the year the defendant brought out an edition of Lamb's letters including these sixteen letters. On April 30, 1904, the writ in this action was issued, so that the grant of letters of administration of Lamb's estate to A. H. Moxon and his assignment to the defendant were subsequent to the commencement of the action.

Judgment.

Mr. Justice Kekewich said that this was an extremely difficult case. The plaintiffs claimed the right to publish certain letters of Charles Lamb's which were many years old. They alleged that they purchased that right from a lady and gentleman, Mr. and Mrs. Steeds, who were in possession of the letters up to some ten years ago. There being no suggestion that these persons obtained the letters by theft or otherwise improperly, he would assume that they were in lawful possession of the letters. What that implied was really the question to be decided. There was no doubt that they assigned their rights as regards publication to the plaintiffs, and if the plaintiffs were entitled to publish they were entitled to restrain other persons who were not entitled to publish. That raised the question whether the defendant was entitled to publish. The defendant also claimed through Mr. and Mrs. Steeds, and in addition he claimed through the administrator of Charles Lamb. His title through Mr. and Mrs. Steed was obviously defective, because they had already assigned all that they could assign to the plaintiffs, and they had nothing left to assign to the defendant, and Mr. Steeds only purported to confer upon the defendant such rights as still remained in him. The defendant's other title his Lordship did not understand. He could not understand how the administrator of Charles Lamb appointed the other day could have any property in these letters, even assuming that they passed under Charles Lamb's will. The defendant, however, declined to prove his title, and took up the position that it was immaterial whether he had any title or not, so long as the plaintiffs had no title. Therefore, the only question the Court had to decide was whether the right of publication was vested in the plaintiffs. That depended upon the proper construction of a few words in the third section of the Copyright Act, 1842. It was not easy to understand, but, in order to understand it, it was necessary to have in one's mind the common law as it existed at the date of the Act of Parliament. Up to a certain point there was no doubt about the common law. After referring to Caird v. Sime (12 App. Cas. 326) and Earl of Lytton v. Devey (52 L. T. 121), he said that it was clear upon the authorities that the writer of a letter retained a right of property in it which entitled him to prevent its publication by others without his consent, but precisely what that right of property was, and how it ought to be defined, the cases did not say. However, on the present occasion these questions were purely academic. That being the common law, the question was what was the meaning of the Act of Parliament. The section was divided into two parts, and in his Lordship's opinion that division was the origin of the puzzle. The first part provided that the copyright in every book (which included letters) published in the author's lifetime should endure for a certain time and should be the property of the author and his assigns, and, having enacted that, the Legislature went on to say what was to happen in the case of a book published after the death of the author, and it did not say that the copyright should be in the author or his assigns or his legal personal representatives. No difficulty would have been felt by any experienced draftsman in expressing that in proper language if that had been the intention of the Legislature. His Lordship thought it was fair to conclude that the Legislature did not intend that. The Legislature said this: 'The copyright of every book which shall be published after the death of the author . . . shall be the property of the proprietor of the author's manuscript.' There was no difficulty as to the meaning of the 'manuscript.' It meant that which was written by the hand. In the case of a letter it meant the actual letter written by the author by his pen or pencil. In these days it would extend also to a typewritten letter, or to a printed letter if the author used a private printing press. Or, again, if the author used an amanuensis and dictated the letter, that would be within this provision. It must be the author's manuscript. That meant that which proceeded from the writer as his own work. Suppose a man wrote a letter and kept a copy, in his Lordship's opinion the letter which was sent would be the author's manuscript. The next question was who was the proprietor of the author's manuscript. According to the common law there were two proprietors, the holder of the manuscript and the writer of the letter, who had that property in it which enabled him to prevent its publication. Did the Legislature intend to perpetuate that? In his Lordship's opinion, having regard to the division of the section into two parts and to the care of the Legislature not to repeat in the second part what it said in the first part, the proprietor of the author's manuscript must mean the proprietor of the physical piece of paper and the writing upon it. That was the only meaning he could give to those words. He had no reason to doubt that Steeds and his wife were the proprietors of these letters. They were entitled to publish the letters themselves or to hand them over to others to publish. That having been done, nothing remained in them except the right to the manuscripts themselves. The right to publication was gone. There would be a declaration that the right of publication was vested in the plaintiffs, Smith, Elder & Co. with liberty for the plaintiffs to apply for an injunction. The plaintiffs were also entitled to an account of profits, but there would be a stay of execution for fourteen days in case the defendant desired to appeal.

FROM AN UP-TO-DATE LIBRARIAN.

'Oh, isn't it great to be "up to date!"
And live in this year of grace,
With a system and place for everything,
Though nobody knows the place!

We've an index card for each thing we do,
And everything under the sun:
It takes so long to fill out the cards
We never get anything done.

We've loose-leaf ledgers for saving time,
The Lord knows what they cost!
When half our time is spent each day
Hunting for leaves that are lost.

Stenographers who spell like ——
And make us swear and cuss,
When we are not dictating to them,
Why, they are dictating to us.

And sectional this and sectional that (We'll soon have sectional legs);
I dreamt last night that I made a meal
Of sectional ham and eggs.

I dreamt I lived in a sectional house,
And rode a sectional "hoss,"
And drew my pay in sections from
A sectional "section-boss."

Oh, isn't it great to be "up to date!"
And live in this year of grace,
With a system and place for everything,
Though nobody knows the place!'

MESSRS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S DIARIES, &c.

Messrs. De La Rue & Co. send us a selection of their Diaries and Tablet Calendars for 1906, which are all produced in the best taste and quality of workmanship.

We would direct attention to the following specialities:

The Traveller's Index Diary, containing a compendium of information valuable to English tourists, including steamship and railway guide, current moneys, illustrations of the principal flags, &c. It has a very convenient cut index, which enables the book to be opened at the month required.

The Traveller's Condensed Diary is a concise form of the Traveller's Index Diary, suitable for the purse or pocket-book.

The Quarterly Diary (a novelty in this season's issue), in a supple leather thumb case, gives ample space for daily memoranda, at the same time being of the least possible bulk. Each part is no thicker than the Condensed Diary.

The Condensed Diary, in cases fitted with Messrs. De La Rue's patent 'Spero' binders, by which the book is neatly held in position; the old-fashioned elastic being dispensed with.

The Diamond Diary, in an elegant Panne calf cover. The Bi-Monthly Tablet Calendar and the Bi-Monthly Engagement Calendar, exhibiting two months simultaneously, thus greatly facilitating reference.

TEMPLE BAR.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. announce that Temple Bar will be published from January next at the price of 6*d.* net. For over forty years Temple Bar has held the field as a shilling monthly of the highest class, and at the new price its old tradition as a magazine of literature will be sustained. Every month an article will appear on some famous man or woman of letters, foreign as well as English. Not infrequently articles on foreign writers will be accompanied by a scholarly translation of one of the shorter works of the author discussed, and always at the end of such articles will appear a list of the best English versions of his books. Each number will contain short stories of a level of excellence at least as high as that which has made Temple Bar famous in the past as a magazine of fiction. Nor will the tastes of those readers who prefer articles on subjects of literary and general interest be disregarded.

BOOKS AS CHRISTMAS CARDS.

Mr. Heinemann draws attention to the fact, that his little 'Favourite Classics,' bound in cloth at sixpence and in leather at a shilling, form the most delightful 'Christmas Cards' that could be sent out. The series includes all the Plays of Shakespeare, the Poems of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Selected Poems of Tennyson, Matthew Arnold, and Edgar Allan Poe, Sheridan's Plays, Robert Browning's 'Pippa Passes,' and Fitzgerald's version of 'Omar Khayyam.'

Complaints are loud against the French Post Office, which is accused of pursuing a skin flint policy by undermanning its services, and consequently overworking its men, with the result that masses of correspondence are delayed, and that it is sometimes advisable, when you have a pressing letter for an address in town, to walk across Paris with it yourself, rather than confide it to the post. That there is some just ground for criticism is proved by the Postmaster-General's intention, announced at the last Cabinet Council, of applying to Parliament for additional supplies, in order to increase his staff very considerably.

On the other hand, there is something to be said on the side of the Post Office. The picture-postcard craze in particular threatens to become a social danger. The following case is said to be typical during the summer season. From a microscopic seaside resort close to Boulogne, with a few hundred permanent inhabitants, actually 30,000 picture postcards were sent off during thirty days. The local postmistress is at her wits' end, and halfpenny stamps have long since given out, while Boulogne cannot spare any, and stamps of 1 cent and 2 cents have to be substituted. What the daily send-off of picture postcards from places like Boulogne itself must be one can hardly imagine.

Madame Hofer, by the way, the cantinière who won a million francs, is indirectly giving the Post-Office a deal of extra trouble. Her average of letters, nearly all proposals of marriage, has now reached 2,000 a day. Most of them are insufficiently stamped, or not at all.

MISSING BOOKSELLER.

Mr. David Murray, bookseller, Falmouth, has been missing since the evening of November 21, and the most strenuous exertions on the part of his relatives to find him have been unsuccessful. There appear no reasons for his going away, as his business affairs had only recently been arranged. It is, however, supposed that as a result of his recent business worries his mind has become unhinged, and that he may be wandering about the country with a loss of memory. It is thought that his lifelong association with books might naturally lead him to a bookseller's shop. Any information which will lead to his recovery will be welcomed by his father, Mr. Frank Murray, bookseller, Derby, or by Mr. E. E. Armitage, Town Clerk of Falmouth; also by the police or Salvation Army in any town.

U.S. COPYRIGHT CONVENTION WITH JAPAN.

The announcement that a copyright convention between Japan and the United States has been satisfactorily concluded, and is on the eve of being signed, is confirmed by the State Department. There has been diplomatic correspondence relative to this treaty for a number of years.—N.Y. Publishers' Weekly.

THE STUDIO, AND WHAT TO DO IN IT.*

Mr. Ralph Robinson has recently issued a third and revised edition of the well-known and highly useful manual written by his father, the late H. P. Robinson.

Although a considerable time has elapsed since the book was first published, the procedure in photographic portraiture has changed but little, and were it not for the somewhat quaint costumes in some of the illustrations, one might suppose the work to be of quite recent date. Many of the crude attempts in portraiture, chiefly in regard to the lighting, one sees sometimes in the windows of 'high-class' photographers, and very often in amateurs' albums, could have been avoided by a close study and still closer application of the methods detailed by Mr. Robinson.

From Portraiture to Panoramas is a somewhat lengthy stride, but No. 73 of the eminently useful series, 'The Photo Miniature,' is so interesting that we would fain call the attention of all photographers to this the latest addition. Most interesting is an account of photographing modern American Towers of Babel, or 'skyscrapers,' as they are more commonly known; and excellent illustrations help to elucidate the text where needed.

NOTES ON A TOUR IN THE UNITED STATES.

It is with much pleasure, though with some diffidence, that the writer accedes to the request of the Editor of this journal to contribute a few notes of a seven weeks' tour in the United States. It is with some diffidence, because, although the experiences of a first visit to these great countries must be in all particulars of the utmost interest to those privileged to enjoy them, such experiences may not necessarily be of any considerable interest to the readers of an organ which is solely concerned with the affairs of the publishing and bookselling trades in Great Britain. I shall endeavour, however, in this issue to confine attention as far as possible to matters connected in a greater or less degree with the Trades, reserving for a future occasion some account of the libraries and literary institutions visited in the course of the tour.

Having enjoyed the comfort and luxury of crossing and recrossing in the splendid vessels of the Cunard and Allan lines, it is with a natural and pardonable curiosity that one turns to the amusing pages of Dickens's 'American Notes'—written over sixty years ago—to compare experiences of an Atlantic voyage. It is quite needless to explain that the 'utterly impracticable, thoroughly hopeless and profoundly preposterous box' which served as a 'state-room' for 'Charles Dickens Esquire and lady,' on board the steamship 'Britannia' in 1842, has long since given place to a state-room which would satisfy even the exuberant imagination of the great novelist. But space forbids comparisons between 'the long narrow apartment, not unlike a gigantic hearse, with windows in the sides,' and the magnificently fitted and spacious saloon of the present day; between a vessel of twelve hundred tons and one of twelve thousand; or between an uncertain passage of fourteen or fifteen days and one of seven performed with time-table regularity. One minor feature alone may be noted—the ship's printing-press, where a printer and his assistant work in a cramped compartment which serves at once as composing and machine room. Their work, which is very hard for the first five or six days of the voyage, consists in issuing menus for all meals (one for the use of emigrants in the steerage, usually being printed in Swedish), printing programmes for the concerts or entertainments held on board, and in publishing a news-sheet or Daily Bulletin on the Cunard steamers. The latter consists of thirty-two pages, of which the four middle pages alone are printed on board, and contains such items of news as have been received by marconigrams from passing steamers, together with a list of the saloon passengers and other details of the ship's run, the weather, and so forth. This Cunard Daily Bulletin is said to be the first 'daily paper' regularly published on ocean-going steamers; and certainly a sense of wonder is aroused each morning on reading the latest intelligence received through so mysterious an agency, the only sign of which is a strange clicking sound emanating from a cabin-house on deck, and indicating the transmission of a message from a vessel some forty or fifty miles away. At the same time one realises that it is no longer possible to enjoy to the fullest degree that tranquillity and freedom from the doings of the world which Froude, in one of his admirable 'Short Studies,' rightly characterises as not the least of the many charms of an ocean voyage, and we must at length recognise that scientific enterprise has invaded even the ocean, 'and robbed us even of our ten days' respite from the leading article and the latest intelligence.'

Arrived in New York Harbour, the feature which undoubtedly first strikes the attention of the observer is the remarkable appearance of the great city—an appearance wholly due to the enormous height of the office buildings which have sprung up with such marked rapidity within recent years. Other features there are, entirely unknown in the days of Charles Dickens, which cannot be more than mentioned here—for instance, the admirable system of electric trams, or 'trolley cars' as they are invariably called; the more objectionable, but hardly less popular, elevated railway; the very efficient Rapid Transit Railroad or New York Subway, with its four tracks for express and local services; and the universal use made of the telephone and the typewriter. One characteristic, however, on which the novelist comments, is as strongly marked in these days as in his, and the writer is glad to take even this distant opportunity of acknowledging it. It is the hospitality and courtesy of the American people, and, as illustrating it, I may perhaps be forgiven a personal allusion. Knowing that I am keenly interested in all that concerns the British Navy, my friend Mr. Marston kindly furnished me with a letter of introduction to Captain Mahan—a writer to whom this country is very largely indebted for his enforcement of the lessons to be derived from the study of sea-power. On arriving in New York I was much gratified to find a letter waiting me from Captain Mahan, written in the most courteous and hospitable terms, and which I am only induced to refer to here for the reason already stated.

With so much to see in New York that is both interesting and novel, a stay of rather less than a week is not sufficient to enable one to form an adequate opinion, still less to offer any remarks, on the allied trades of publishing and bookselling. It must suffice to say with respect to the latter, that the 'stores'—as all shops are invariably termed—of the more important booksellers are spacious and well fitted, affording ample opportunities for the unmolested inspection of the well-selected and excellent stocks. Of course the more rare and valuable books are kept in a special room, or enclosed in cases, but otherwise greater freedom is allowed to customers to inspect the stocks at leisure than in this country—a feature, indeed, which is very marked in the general commercial methods of America. Further than this I need only record two visits, one paid to the offices in Broadway of the Publishers' Weekly—the journal of the American book trade, established in 1852—and another to the rooms of the foremost literary auctioneers, where it is pleasant to find in the manager, Mr. E. Turnbull, a former London bookseller who is taking an active and important part in the compilation of the excellent catalogues issued by his firm.

BOOKBINDING TRADE SECTION OF THE LONDON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE (INCORPORATED).

Dear Sir,—We beg respectfully to draw your attention to the serious advance which has recently taken place in the price of leather, whereby all articles manufactured wholly or in part from leather have been raised in price.

The increased cost of leather is not due to any temporary cause. The undressed skins are sold monthly at public auction, and for many months past the price realised has steadily improved, showing that demand exceeds supply.

The time has now come when it is impossible for us longer to withhold notice of an increase in the price of leather bindings We, therefore, on behalf of the bookbinding trade (of which we are the duly appointed representatives) beg to notify you that on and after January 1, 1906, the price of bindings into which leather enters as an item of cost will be increased.—Yours faithfully,

THE BOOKSELLER'S GUIDE TO CORRESPONDENCE, IN GERMAN, ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN.

Sir,—I am sending to you by post Part I. of the 'Bookseller's Correspondence Guide' for review, and I shall be much obliged if you will kindly mention in your notice that the original issue of this part was withdrawn from publication owing to the translations being far from satisfactory. It has now been retranslated throughout by competent business men in the respective countries, and the Italian language has been added.

Thanking you in anticipation.—Yours truly

Karl Fr. Pfau.

Leipzig,
November 27, 1905.

[We are glad to publish Mr. Pfau's letter, because it was The Publishers' Circular which first drew his attention to the highly comical, but not quite businesslike nature, of the English of his first issue; it now promises to be the most important work of the kind and invaluable to all who do business with booksellers in foreign countries.—Ed.]

FLAT-BACKED BOOKS.

Dear Sir,—I think you are right in saying, in your foot-note to Mr. McMechan's letter, that the Americans set the fashion for flat-backed cloth books. The style, however, was only new in so far as it was applied to cloth binding. It had been in vogue here with leather binders for many years. I can remember to have seen twenty years ago books bound by Maurel in polished morocco with flat backs, hand-tooled, and very beautiful they were. Yours truly,

Notices of Books

From Mr. H. R. Allenson.—'Forty Bible Lessons and Forty Illustrative Stories; or, the Bible in Lesson and Story,' by R. M. Brown. The narrative form unquestionably presents a valuable medium through which the highest moral teaching may be inculcated in children, and Mrs. Brown, who, as we understand, has first experimented with these stories and their lessons in her own family, is to be congratulated on the fact that she has constantly borne in mind the necessity for impressing her young hearers with the purpose of the tales rather than their individual facts. The book is equally well adapted for home and school use.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'The Paramor Papers,' by Florence Popham. The essays gathered together in this volume from the pages of T. P.'s Weekly, the Sketch, and other periodicals, are of an agreeable social character, brightly written if of no great profundity of thought. They treat among other subjects of 'Moving Houses,' 'Minor Economics,' 'Gardens and Garden Books,' 'Shopping in the Suburbs,' 'The Humours of Travelling,' 'The Amateur Doctor,' 'Thoughts on the Giving of Presents,' 'The Maternal Instinct, and—what has agitated domestic circles, we imagine, since very early times—'The Servant Question.'

From Messrs. Samuel Bagster & Sons, Ltd.—'My Brother's Keeper,' by Alfred E. Garvie, M.A., D.D. Dr. Garvie has written on conventional lines a thoughtful essay on the Social Problem; the conclusions he arrives at are the common property of most Christians, and his exhortations to the reader to fulfil his personal obligation to be 'his brother's keeper' are more earnest than novel. The style is well knit and pleasing, and the arguments sound and suggestive.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd.—'The Art and Practice of Laundry Work,' by Margaret Cuthbert Rankin. This small book, addressed especially to young housekeepers and to those who have the privilege of educating the girls and women of our country in this important branch of domestic economy, is the outcome of many years' practical experience and observation. The various details of laundry work are very thoroughly gone into, and information is also supplied regarding the 'dry-cleaning' of different kinds of materials—silks, laces, kid gloves, furs, and so forth. To the folding of serviettes in various fanciful shapes an entire chapter is devoted. The volume is illustrated with numerous diagrams.

From the same.—'Blackie's Model Readers, Book III.' If an admirable selection of text material, large clear type, and a profusion of illustrations, many of them coloured, tend to the success of a 'Reader,' then undoubtedly should this book be successful indeed. It is in every way well equipped for the purpose intended. Among numerous other educational works we have received from Messrs. Blackie—all of excellent design and good workmanship—are 'The Black Hole of Calcutta and the Battle of Plassey' (taken from Robert Orme's 'History of the British Nation in Indostan from the year 1745,' published by John Nourse in 1778); Napier's 'Peninsular War: Salamanca, Siege of Burgos, Vittoria, and Siege of San Sebastian,' and 'The General History of Virginia, Book II.,' all of which are in Blackie's 'English School Texts,' edited by Dr. W. H. D. Rouse; and several issues of Blackie's well-known 'Little French Classics,' 'Little German Classics,' and 'Latin Texts' Series. Blackie's 'Story Book Readers,' adapted for infants from the works of well-known authors, and each supplied with several illustrations and a most attractive cover, call for a special word of commendation. They are suitable for Standards I., II., III., and IV.

From Messrs. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co., Ltd.—'An "Absolutely Literal" Translation of Xenophon's Anabasis, Book I.,' by the Rev. J. H. Elstob, M.A. This is exactly what it professes to be—a perfectly literal translation of the First Book of the Greek historian's famed work executed with great fidelity and care. It should be found exceedingly useful by junior scholars.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'The Second Athenian Confederacy,' by F. H. Marshall, M.A. This essay was awarded the Thirlwall Prize of 1905, and, in accordance with the regulations for that prize, it is now published, forming No

Mention the 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the Publishers' Circular will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

XIII. of the 'Cambridge Historical Series.' The purpose of the work is to describe, in as clear and concise a manner as possible, what is known of the principles and history of the Second Athenian Confederacy. Naturally, the book is to a large extent based on Busolt's previous monograph on the subject, but the author has in various directions shown that he can walk without crutches in exploring ancient history, and in his analysis of the new material which has been discovered since the German savant wrote, he displays a keen discrimination and good judgment.

From the same.—'Poems on Several Occasions,' by Matthew Prior. Edited by A. R. Waller, M.A. Prior should perhaps be accorded a higher place among the poets than he is usually given to-day. If his more serious pieces lack that something which makes for greatness, his shorter work is often very happy and exceedingly humorous; and this edition, the text of which is taken from his last collected issue following the folio of 1718, may well help him to receive justice from the present generation. The original spelling and punctuation have been preserved, there are many notes, and the work is a welcome addition to this series of English classics. A second volume, containing the remainder of Prior's writings in prose and verse, is to follow.

From The Car Illustrated, Ltd.—'The Cruise of the "Conquistador,"' by G. Sydney Paternoster. Those who were interested in the career of 'The Motor Pirate' and his audacious proceedings, as revealed by the author in a previous novel, will welcome with anticipation of keen enjoyment Mr. Paternoster's present romance. It seems that the diabolically daring Randolph Mannering was not killed when he disappeared in his motor over the cliff at the Land's End, though for seven years he was lost to mortal ken, and he now turns up in charge of a motor-boat, the 'Conquistador,' with which he continues his nefarious practices, even holding up an Atlantic liner. As the 'Conquistador' can travel at the rate of forty knots an hour, her power, for evil and agility in evading capture, may easily be imagined. But the main direction in which Mannering, as of old, shows himself obnoxious is towards the supposed narrator of the story, Sutgrove, for whom he has conceived a fiendish dislike, and the narrative is chiefly an account of the struggle between the couple. Eventually Sutgrove, aided by an American millionaire who is determined to win at any price, and other adherents, tracks the Motor Pirate to his lair, and we have quite a fine pyrotechnic display at the finish. All the same, we shrewdly suspect that the unprincipled Mannering will be heard of again. If he could survive that fall over the cliffs in Cornwall, flames would be as nothing to him. The story is exciting.

From Messrs. Chapman & Hall.—'Oxendale,' by Ella MacMahon. This story of modern musical and social life is concerned with the fortunes of Signor Giovanni Rabailliatti, the famous pianist, his cousin, Jack Vansittart; and the Dalisons, their family connections. By the sudden death of James Augustus Clement Vansittart, ninth Earl of Oxendale, who unfortunately departs this life without issue, the next-of-kin to the earldom is then eagerly sought for. Through the successful efforts of the family lawyer he is at length discovered in the person of Rabailliatti, but he, however, is not elated by his prospective exalted position, being so devoted to his profession. Lord Oxendale is enamoured of Vera Dalison, who is in turn beloved by his friend and cousin Vansittart. The complications that arise therefrom arrest our attention, while the subsequent terrible disaster which befalls the hero, Oxendale, adds a touch of pathos to the well-developed and sympathetically told novel.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Tales and Fantasies,' by Robert Louis Stevenson. A collection of three of Stevenson's earlier stories that are perhaps not very well known of readers. One of them, 'The Body Snatcher,' is of an exceedingly gruesome character; 'The Misadventures of John Nicholson' has to do with scarcely less thrilling incidents, and 'The Story of a Lie' is full of dramatic situations. These short stories scarcely exhibit Stevenson at his best, and possibly by some it may be thought a little unsympathetic to revive them, but they show the early beginnings of that artistic perception which was eventually to have such a prosperous development. They are now we believe for the first time published in book form.

From the same.—'The Life of Charles Dickens as Revealed in his Writings,' by Percy Fitzgerald, M.A., F.S.A. Two volumes. The lover of Dickens, like all true lovers, will only be too glad when his idol is spoken of, even when the conversation traverses familiar ground. Regarded from this point of view, Mr. Fitzgerald's volumes are exceedingly interesting. We have long known him as an author who was closely connected with 'Boz' through the pages of All the Year Round; and even after the lapse of so many years we have a vivid remembrance of 'Fatal Zero' and other serial stories which he wrote for the columns of that famous periodical. The present volumes, like most of Mr. Fitzgerald's later works, are of an agreeable, gossipy character, replete with personal reminiscence and casual deductions rather than a penetrative study of facts. Mr. Fitzgerald first takes up the subject of Dickens's 'Youth and Manhood in Kent,' his love of Rochester, the Bull Inn and its company, early training connections with Broadstairs, Gadshill, and so forth. From this he proceeds to 'Pictured Places in Town and Country,' including that great scene of Mr. Winkle's and Sam Weller's escapades, Bath, Bob Sawyer's lodging in the Borough, and innumerable other spots associated with the great novelist's writings; while the third and concluding division of his work is devoted to what he terms 'Motor Forces and Methods,' these embracing Dickens's sympathy with the poor, his religious convictions, strong personality, &c. The frontispiece to the first volume is a portrait of John Dickens, father of the novelist, while Charles Dickens himself, at the age of nineteen, from a drawing by Thomas Uwins, R.A., serves in like capacity for the second volume. We note with regret that there is no index to the work, though the full table of contents has its compensatory value.

From Messrs. James Clarke & Co.—'Alexander Mackennal, B.A., D.D., Life and Letters,' by Dugald Macfadyen, M.A. It was inevitable that the life story of this ideal pastor, who was for so many years connected with the Bowdon Downs Congregational Church, should be made public. He was, in the truest sense, a 'man of mark,' for at one time in his career he also held the honoured position of Secretary of the Congregational Union. From his earliest days he recognised the force of Browning's words:

My business is not to remake myself,
But make the absolute best of what God made.

Dr. Mackennal's gracious and dominant personality, it is recorded, made itself felt throughout his manhood, and was in accord with his correspondence on the 'supreme subject' of faith and conduct appearing in that portion of this biography named 'A Spiritual Directorate.' The author of this book has accorded us an opportunity of obtaining the knowledge of a gifted minister of great kindliness and broad sympathies, whose life therein is skilfully portrayed. The volume contains, as frontispiece, a good portrait of Dr. Mackennal, and other illustrations.

From the same.—'Why We Believe,' by Philip Whitwell Wilson. This is the work of a practised writer—of a man who is able present his point of view in a luminous and striking manner. He has not much that is new to say, but his essays on religion and brotherhood are thoughtful, kind-hearted, and broad-minded. He has learnt much from children, and indeed his writing has the simplicity and directness of the speech of a grown-up and wise child. A good book, sure to be welcomed by those in spiritual difficulties.

From the same.—'The Eternal Religion,' by J. Brierley, B.A. Mr. Brierley is very well known to a wide circle of readers as 'J. B.'—two initials which cover but do not disguise a personality of singular attraction. The secret of his success lies in the fact that his style, his thought, the very atmosphere of his writings, are suited to the needs of the thinking man in the street. The problems he discusses are urgent problems which affect men to-day, and the subjects upon which he touches are subjects of wide and deep interest. He has few prejudices, but many enthusiasms; he is a man of culture—many-sided, sympathetic, expansive. The present writer has enjoyed this volume of sermons more than any similar book that has come his way during the last twelve months; it is a book to read, a book to keep.

From the same.—'My Neighbour and God: a Criticism of "God and My Neighbour,"' by W. T. Lee. This is scarcely the place to enlarge upon the merits of Mr. Lee's reply to the attack of Mr. Robert Blatchford on the tenets of present-day Christianity, even supposing we had the space at our command to do so, but we may say that his book shows an honest endeavour to arrive at a correct and impartial view of the question, and that it is worthy of attention by both supporters and opponents alike.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Tutorial Press, Ltd.)—'First Stage Physiography (Section I.),' edited by R. Wallace Stewart, D.Sc. The basis on which this volume of 'The Organised Science Series'—intended primarily for candidates preparing for the Board of Education Examination on the subject—is prepared is in every way admirable. Working from a series of instructive experiments, which are easy to perform and require but little apparatus, the student is introduced through the medium of specialists acting under general editorship to the main principles of each science, which are clearly and logically explained in the text. The treatment throughout is strictly elementary. At the end of each chapter is a short summary, and there are numerous examples, the answers to which are given at the end of the book.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'In the Land of the Gods,' by Alice Mabel Bacon. It is difficult in a few words to do justice to the compelling charm of this collection of stories of Japanese life. The authoress—an American who has evidently taken Lafcadio Hearn as her master, and who infuses into her writing something of his power of portraying 'the incommunicable thrill of things'—gives it as the object of her work 'to render vivid to American minds some of the popular beliefs and superstitions of Japan' averring that 'nothing, perhaps, has surprised the Occident more than the spiritual force of the race—the reverent but certain attitude in which its members stand towards much that is to us unknown, or at best intermittently believed.' Her knowledge of the Japanese is at first hand, and indeed the vivid pictures that she draws could only be from the pen of one who had drunk deep of their national spirit. Several of the stories circle round the late war; others are concerned with the ancient Fox Legend, with which readers of Lafcadio Hearn will be already familiar; most contain studies of child life, and confirm the often-quoted description of Japan as the Children's Paradise; and all have a thread of the supernatural running through them. In a book in which everything is so good it is not easy to single out any special theme for praise; but the stories entitled 'The Shrine of Fudo' and 'How Fumi Remembered' are perhaps the best things in Miss Bacon's fascinating book, which we put down with a sigh of regret, and shall return to with delight.

From the same —' Days of the Past,' by Alexander Innes Shand. This is an exceedingly pleasant book to live with for a short time, and be your bent of mind literary, sporting, or merely of the generally observant kind, you will herein find much that, possibly, you did not know, and certainly many things to entertain and recall pleasant memories. The essays concerning London lodgings, the changes in the town, and the evolution which has taken place in its restaurants and hotels are very interesting; and if it has not been our fortune to enjoy so many goodly feasts at places of entertainment now gone or altered out of all recognition, we shall doubtless be reminded of many a festive gathering in which we have had our part when the blood ran a little faster than it does at present and our digestions were in better working order. Perhaps the pleasantest chapters are those dealing with literary recollections, and the author has many a good story to tell concerning men whose names have become household words. There is also some very sound advice with regard to speculation on the Stock Exchange, and altogether this medley of memories is well worthy a place on the library shelf.

From the same.—'Will Warburton,' by George Gissing. The hero of this realistic romance of life is obliged by the fraud of his partner to earn his own living and that of his mother and sister, and resolves to become a retail grocer, keeping from his friends the secret of his living: perhaps the only part of the plot that is not true to life is that he succeeds, though obviously without the necessary qualifications. This plan, however, enables the writer to describe several different phases of society, and some of the characters are delightful. George Gissing has earned for himself by some of his previous writings the name of a realistic pessimist, but in this book we have a much brighter picture than usual, though grim enough at times; the leading characters are alive, and the book carries us steadily on to a well worked out, but not inevitable finish. It is a great advance on his previous works of the same class, and we feel sure that no reader, who appreciates a good novel will fail to be pleased with it.

From the same.—'The Decoration of Leather. Trans-lated from the French of Georges de Récy by Maude Nathan. This is at once a thoroughly practical and highly artistic volume: practical, because from beginning to end the subject is dealt with from a utilitarian point of view; artistic, because the numerous illustrations have been wisely selected and beautifully reproduced. Several exquisite examples of modern English and French bookbinding work are given, and it is to those who are desirous of preparing and decorating the covers of their favourite books that this subject will most urgently appeal. In addition to the delightful full-page illustrations, there are many figures in the text showing the kinds of tools required for the decoration of leather and the manner in which they should be used; these are, from the practical point of view, invaluable, and with their assistance and the help of the clearly written text the amateur should be able to produce satisfactory work.

From the same.—'The Colonel's Dream,' by Charles W. Chesnutt. That comprehensive grasp of the negro question which appeared in T. Booker Washington's biography under the title of "Up from Slavery' has been the impetus to a wider consideration of the vexed ''mismated race' problem in the United States. The novel before us is the outcome of the feeling that is prevalent among a section of the American people. Colonel Henry French, who had fought with 'desperate valour' in the Confederate ranks during the Civil War and had since achieved a fortune as a New York merchant, decides to return to his birthplace in Clarendon and renew his former friendships. He accordingly quits the northern capital with his motherless boy Phil, and on his arrival in the southern town the charm of the old associations induces him to look upon his ancestral home as a centre in which he may be enabled to develop his dreamt-of plans for the amelioration of the persecuted coloured race of that district. The Colonel's persistent efforts to carry out his various projects are thwarted by the apathy and prejudices of the ruling authorities, as well as by the bigoted opposition of men of the type of William Fetters (a rich convict labour contractor), whose blighting influence the author likens to that of 'a vampire bat sucking the life blood of the people.' Such is the basis of the story, wherein the author displays an intimate knowledge of his subject and likewise presents us with several interesting studies of American and native character, notably that of Peter, an old and attached negro man-servant, whose tragical death is described with much pathos.

From the same.—'The Coming of the Tide,' by Margaret Sherwood. The heroine of this delightful American story is one Frances Wilmot, an imaginative young lady from Virginia, whose fate becomes interwoven with that of the Bevannes and the Warrens, two rival New England families. For many years there had been existant much ill-feeling on both sides, and this is now further intensified by the known rivalship betwixt the younger sons, Alec Bevanne and Paul Warren, for the affections of Frances Wilmot. There is every indication of a tragic termination to this newly formed attachment as far as it relates to Frances, who is saved by Paul from her planned destruction at the hands of the rejected lover, Alec Bevanne. This bare outline suffices at least to show the central situation of the novel which has also throughout many vivid descriptive passages of American sea and shore.

From the same.—'The Labourer's Comedy, by Maud Stepney Rawson. This is a decidedly clever and amusing novel. The story is chiefly concerned with Plowden Gifford and his wife Pamela, who, through the collapse of a great company, find they are bereft of their once cherished social position. Plowden, however, is a scientific investigator, and, having a ready gift for invention, succeeds in patenting a new 'rubber substitute'; while Pamela, a resourceful woman, joins the staff of contributors to the 'Peeress' and other women's weekly papers. Thus husband and wife become 'labourers' in the vortex of London life. It is in this portion of the novel, wherein they set about 'rebuilding their fortunes,' that the dramatic skill of the authoress is shown. The story is told in a straightforward manner, and develops in a way that constantly stimulates the imagination.

From Messrs. Dean & Son.—'The Winged Helmet,' by Harold S. MacKaye. In this historical romance an American author has striven to convey to English readers much of the glamour surrounding military and social life in France of the sixteenth century, founded upon the records and oral traditions of the families of Du Beaulieu and Sieur de Ravelle. In thus perpetuating the past he has introduced into the narrative the romantic and thrilling adventures of Henri de Bersier, a young knight in the secret service of King Francis the First. In his loyal adherence to the Countess Yvonne (the wife of Du Beaulieu) and to her house, the heroic brother and King's spy incurs the jealousy of the grim Count, who is in open rebellion with his monarch. The subsequent portions of the book are devoted to the rehabilitation of and confirming the disinterested nature of De Bersier's character. In the performance of this difficult task the author is to be congratulated, and also for the meritorious manner by which it has been achieved. The romance is accompanied throughout with some effective illustrations by H. C. Edwards.

From Mr. C. W. Daniel we have received four new Threepenny Booklets: 'Self-Reliance,' by Ralph Waldo Emerson; 'A Vindication of National Diet,' by Percy Bysshe Shelley; 'Reincarnation,' by R. Dimsdale Stocker; and 'Health,' by J. H. Oliver. Little need be said of the first two of these. Mr. Stocker's essays on Reincarnation, Conversion, and Inspiration are of considerable interest, although the reader is unlikely to be able to accept all the author's conclusions. 'Reincarnation is the keynote to spiritual philosophy—the basis of all true science,' the author says, a statement which many, we conceive, will not readily endorse. Mr. J. H. Oliver's practical treatise on Hygiene is a useful little book, and will well repay careful perusal. The form of these booklets admirably fits them for the pocket, and since a certain portion of the daily life of most of us is spent in travelling, they have a very distinct utility. An Emerson essay, for instance, at hand in a convenient form for an odd quarter of an hour is not to be despised.

From the same.—'The Religion of the Jews' and 'Christian Religion,' by William Loftus Hare. These two volumes of the 'World's Religion' series follow each other naturally, and for many will, perhaps, be the most interesting of these books. The author has, so to speak, boiled his subject down into two compact essays, and very admirably he has done it. The result, however, is to cast doubt upon much of the Old Testament, and to rob the New of its very heart to which Christians hold fast. It is not within our province here to enter into the lists and fight for the convictions which a few people, at any rate, still have the temerity to hold; we will only remark, and no one will surely accuse us of being dogmatic, that Mr. Hare may be wrong. It is just possible that his reading of Bible story, legend, and prophecy may not contain all that is in them; while it is absolutely certain that his word will not be the last said upon the subject.

From the same.—'Nonconformity in the Nineteenth Century,' by C. Silvester Horne, M.A. This short history is very instructive, and if, as is only natural, it treats religious progress during this period entirely from the Nonconformist point of view, it must be admitted that in the main it is done in a broad-minded spirit. Of course it could be criticised from an opposite point of view, but it is not for us to do so here. In fact, to be broad-minded in our turn, we would say that if there were less criticism of one another's shortcomings and failings, more, much more, might be accomplished for religion generally. If we set up champion against champion, battling, be it remembered, in the same cause, we approach and cross the threshold of that house which is divided against itself. Let us be impartial. The Nonconformists have done much for religion, but not everything; the virtues do not lie all on one side as some would have us believe. The statistics quoted by the author as to the attendances and communicants in the Free and Anglican Churches must not be taken too literally. It is proverbial that statistics can be made to prove anything, and to mass all the Nonconformist bodies together as though they were a solid body and quote the figures against the Anglican Church is hardly permissible. The Anglican and the Roman Church might as reasonably be considered one.

From Messrs. Deighton, Bell & Co, Cambridge.—'The Cambridge University Calendar for the Year 1905–1906.' A volume of 1,200 pages of small type, and not a single misprint! Well, at all events, we have carefully looked for one, and our search has been unsuccessful. In this Calendar is contained all university information that can conceivably be useful to anyone in need of advice regarding subjects for examinations and prizes, charities, professorships, fees, Indian Civil Service, hostels, Senate-House examinations, Teachers' Training Syndicate, &c.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Noreen,' by Galloway Douglas. This is the sort of book which baffles a reviewer who has no desire to say hard things, but how—how did it ever come to be published? It is absolutely trivial, badly written, and absurd, and can only serve one useful purpose, so far as we can see—namely, to show how a story should not be written.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'The Secret Kingdom,' by Frank Richardson. Since the late Bret Harte published his clever imitations of the works of the novelists of the Victorian age, under the name of 'Condensed Novels,' we have seldom read any so legitimately funny as the contents of Mr. Richardson's book. The methods of the various writers of the Impressionist, Realist, and other schools of fiction so beloved by fashionable society of our day are very cleverly travestied. Readers who are interested in such matters will find the volume most exhilarating reading.

From the same.—'The Wandering of Joyce,' by E. M. Devenish. The love affairs of Joyce, Lucinda, Mary Lawless form the staple interest of this ably written novel. When we are first introduced to her she is 'alone in the world,' her father, 'a naval officer, having been drowned when she was only two years old, and of her mother she knew nothing.' Now living at Sandcot, a little town on the Welsh coast, Joyce forms the acquaintance of Geoffrey Considine, 'a dreamer,' and one who always loved the wind and sea. This friendship ripens into an ill-starred love, for on a wild and stormy night Geoffrey mysteriously disappears and all trace of him is entirely lost. Joyce, however, forthwith resolves to wander in quest of the fugitive, confident that she alone can find him and fulfil her heart's desire. It is in this quest, extending to eight years, that leads the reader of the novel captive until almost the close, for in her wandering the heroine is brought into close intercourse with many differing types of character so convincingly conceived that we feel them to be, not the idle coinage of the novelist's brain, but veritable transcripts from life. Purposely we have refrained from recapitulating the main incidents of this novel, some reticence being due where so good a story is concerned, but we must acknowledge it to be above the average.

From the same.—'The Sacred Cup,' by Vincent Brown. In reading this novel we have been continually reminded of Geoffrey Chaucer and Oliver Goldsmith's tributes to the good parson, in the lives of whom are displayed an humble fidelity to high ideals. The Rev. James Jerred, the Rector of Lamberfield and the prominent character in this story, was such a one as these poets faithfully depicted. Jerred adopts the illegitimate child of Lottie Ollett, a villager, and thus through his unselfish love and pity for an obscure and friendless girl brings unmerited scandal upon himself. His efforts, however, to discover the unknown father are unexpectedly but successfully rewarded, and he is then enabled to cause retributive justice to fall upon the offender, who is even refused the participation in the 'Sacred Cup.' This is the main theme of an intensely interesting and well-developed study of village life and character.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden we have received a little manual entitled 'Stable Management,' by Brig.-Gen. M. F. Rimington, C.B. After carefully examining it we have no hesitation in saying that it is quite up to date, and a most excellent little book both for soldier or hunting man.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.—'The Church and the Schools,' by Rev. W. H. Carnegie, M.A.—This is a churchman's view of the Education controversy, and we do not think any but churchmen will read it with pleasure. Mr. Carnegie's views are stated with force and conviction, and he has little toleration for the views of other people. The author has taken the opportunity of describing at length the United Parishes Organisation—a society of interest to all clergy and laymen of the Church of England.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'The Guarding of a Goddess, and other Poems,' by John D. Ware. There is considerable distinction about the contents of this little volume. The poem which gives the book its name is rather unequal, and there are lines which jar on the ear, but there are also some striking passages. It is in his other poems that we like Mr. Ware best, however. 'The Bend of the Road' and 'A Ballad of the Night' are both attractive. Some of the sonnets, too, are exceedingly good; we particularly like the first of them, called 'Sunday Evening.'

From the same.—'The One-Hoss Shay,' with its companion poems, by Oliver Wendell Holmes. Illustrated in colour by Howard Pyle. They have just imported from Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston, a new edition of this charming old humorous poem. It will be remembered that a few years ago this same work, with the same illustrations by Howard Pyle, was issued by the same publishers, but then they were not coloured. The copies of the present edition are coloured, and as the colouring is delicately and daintily done, it adds a decided charm to the already quaint and humorous pictures. Altogether it forms a very pretty Christmas present.

From the same.—'Her Letter, his Answer, and her Last Letter,' by Bret Harte, pictured by Arthur I. Keller. This is really an exquisite example of work, emanating also from the Boston Riverside Press. There are about fifty charming designs, many of them in gold and colours. Two of the poems illustrated are old favourites, the third was not written till near the end of Mr. Harte's life. Mr. Keller is to be congratulated on his delightful rendering of the many subjects he has chosen from this pretty poem :

How dared you get rich—you great stupid!
  Like papa and some men that I know,
Instead of just trusting to Cupid
  And to me for your money? Ah, Joe!

His interpretation of the above scene in a coloured plate and an etching is very good.

From Messrs. Gibbings & Co.—'Nelsonian Reminiscences: Leaves from Memory's Log,' by G. S. Parsons, Lieut. R.N., edited with Notes by W. H. Long. The author of these reminiscences, first published in 1843, had a long and distinguished naval career, and among other capacities served in the 'Foudroyant' as signal-midshipman under Lord Nelson. He died in 1854. Mr. Long has edited a volume which is full of interesting matter with great care.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—'That Moving Finger,' by Henry C. F. Castleman. This is presumably Mr. Castleman's first novel. He is already well known as a composer and singer. The book turns upon the rather hackneyed situation of a woman who marries one man for his money while her heart is irrevocably given to another. Two months after her marriage to the millionaire Righlands—a 'cruel, mean, vindictive, passionless character'—the man Lady Veronica loves, but did not marry, unexpectedly succeeds to a dukedom through the loss of three lives at sea. Tied to a man she has learnt to loathe, childless, and désillusionnée, the chance meeting after eight years of the lovers in a country house leads to Veronica's undoing. She will have no open scandal, and when she knows herself about to have a child, of which the Duke is the father, she has to endure the sight of her unsuspecting husband's triumph at the prospect of the birth of the long-expected heir. But for her the end is near; she dies in giving birth to a son. Into the second part of the book, which concerns the upbringing of this child, whose fatal likeness to the Duke ultimately makes all concealment impossible, we have no space to enter in detail. Suffice it to say that the interest is well maintained, and the story, although embodying no serious character study and told in language of no great literary value, will be read with avidity by the average novel reader.

From the same.—'The Weaver's Shuttle,' by C. Gasquoine Hartley (Mrs. Gallichan). Janet Bevan, introspective, morbid, cursed with the artistic temperament, emerges from a motherless childhood into the art-student world of Paris, and meets Paul Giraud, a man for whom 'the happiness of oneself is the final goal.' Falling in love with her he urges Janet to 'realise herself,' discarding the idea of marriage as an exploded convention. The strong Puritan strain in her alone saves her: she returns to England and eventually marries the one friend of her childhood, Dick Farrent, a type of the simple minded, rather immature country squire. Their marriage is a long-drawn tragedy of disillusionment and misunderstanding, and Janet, though loving Dick, is constantly reminded of the gulf which temperament and mentality has fixed between them. Later she meets Paul again and realises that the old irresistible attraction is still there. The discovery that her husband is drifting into love with another woman wakes her to her own danger: she flies from the shipwreck of her life, and in the long hours of meditation in the lonely Cumberland village where she has hidden herself realises that 'what had rendered her life intolerable was its radical egoism.' The birth of a child ultimately brings about the reconciliation of husband and wife. Mrs. Gallichan shows much knowledge of art and a real feeling for nature in her writing; but her outlook on life is too pessimistic, and a note of humour would have been a welcome relief in a book of otherwise much merit.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'Ursula Raven,' by Theodora Wilson Wilson. A well-written and interesting story, with an interesting picture of rural life in Westmoreland. The authoress has given us some very good character-sketches of the principal persons in her story, and the only fault we have to find is that the motives underlying Ursula's behaviour are not clearly indicated, and, so far as we can guess them, do not seem altogether adequate. If it were not for this defect we should have placed this story very high indeed; it holds our interest throughout, and to a considerable extent satisfies us in the end. There is a keen and enjoyable sense of humour, and the writer evidently knows thoroughly and can interest her reader in her descriptions of life and scenery in the rugged countryside. The actors, too, are interesting people and well diversified, each with his or her own characteristics well defined, so that we learn to know them and to appreciate their views and actions. We shall look forward to another book from the same pen.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'London Bridge and How it is Played,' by H. M. Beasley, Captain R.A. We have reviewed a good many books on Bridge in these columns during the last year or so, and all have had their good points. The author of this volume acknowledges some indebtedness to Mr. Dalton, whose books on the subject are as good as any. We must confess, however, that we are unable to trace Mr. Dalton's influence in the present volume. We are at a loss, too, to understand for whom this work is intended. It cannot be for beginners, for it does not give any indication of how to score or even of the values of the tricks with the various calls; the knowledge of these values is assumed throughout. Nor can it be intended for advanced players, for most, if not all, is quite elementary. The writer adopts a variation of the 'Robertsonian' rule, which appears inferior to its parent; his requirements for an original no-trump and heart declaration are too high, and vary in different parts of the book. He suggests in one place that he has instructed his reader how to call under certain circumstances, whereas he did the reverse in the place referred to. So that we cannot even commend him as reliable. We fear the book has no raison d'être except the belief that anything on Bridge sells.

From the same.—'The Man,' by Bram Stoker. This is a very good and painstaking study of the development of a woman, though it goes a bit slow in the earlier part—principally because the author interpolates too much psychological reflection, which the judicious reader will soon learn to skip—it develops splendidly, and holds the reader's interest strongly to the finish. The description of the saving of a life at sea is undoubtedly the most powerful and effective we have ever read. While the story is essentially a love story, it depends largely for its interest upon the somewhat unique conditions that surrounded the earlier years of Stephen Norman, a girl brought up by her father, who endeavoured to train her mind in boyish rather than girlish fashion; as a result she shows great independence of thought, and a determination to break away from the conventions that surround a woman's life. Growing up into a beautiful woman with a considerable fortune, she resolves not to wait for any man's pleasure to ask her to be his wife, and, not recognising that the man who has been practically a brother to her all her life is her right mate, she asks another to marry her, only to be refused. Smarting under the intolerable shame she now feels, she visits her anger upon the first person to come her way, and drives away irrevocably, as it appears at the time, the man she soon learns she really wanted. Much grief results to both, but eventually, by means largely of a charming child named Pearl, they are brought together after an exciting shipwreck. The woman has learnt at length that she cannot with impunity outstep the rules which others have found to be best for the guidance of their life, and is nobler and sweeter for the severe lessons she has had to learn. The man is, perhaps, too much of a hero and too self-sacrificing to obtain our love, and our interest in him is always subordinate to our interest in the woman. The author has one or two pecularities which are apt to hinder the reader's interest at first, but, once accustomed to these, the reader will thoroughly enjoy a very carefully written and interesting novel.

From the same.—'Sir Joshua Reynolds,' by Sir Walter Armstrong. We are glad to observe that Sir Walter Armstrong's acute and discriminating life of Sir Joshua Reynolds has been issued to the public at a popular price. It contains twelve photogravures and forty 'half-tones'—all reproductions of paintings by Reynolds. The author gives a concise account of Sir Joshua's career, and records with singular artistic insight and ability his opinions on his art and writings. It is his conviction that from the beginning it has been the custom to regard Reynolds through an idealised atmosphere created by enthusiasm for his art; and he claims that if his monograph possesses any originality, it is that he has 'endeavoured to paint the great artist as a consistent human being, even although the result may be to set him on a plane somewhat different from that chosen by some previous writers.'

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Man to Man,' by Rev. R. E. Welsh, M.A. Mr. Welsh is not the first writer who has imagined that he had it in him to prepare a book that might be of service to young men —'dealing with the intricacies of their minds and souls without cant and without false shame.' Mr. Welsh must live much longer, he must observe much more closely, and he must think more deeply, before he can hope to write anything of real service to his fellows. Let us be candid and honest: the book is by no means free from cant and jejune reasoning, and for young men of untrained intelligence it is not a volume to be recommended. To particularise. Mr. Welsh has cause to refer to Swift, and he quotes from an unnamed writer the following: 'A kind of leering, human goat, leaping and wagging his scut on mountains of offence.' This is all he says of Swift: there is no qualification of any kind. As a description of the great satirist it is libellous and grossly unjust; but unless the young men for whom the book is written have special knowledge of Dean Swift's character and work, they will accept this quoted description simply because it is endorsed by Mr. Welsh. Again, the passage quoted on p. 260 as emanating from 'an advanced music student' is evidently from the brain of a man or woman who is nasty-minded. The music of Chopin and Wagner does not breed 'rank' thoughts save in the minds of those whose thoughts are already rank. We could give many more instances of superficial thought and superficial reading, but perhaps we have said enough.

From the same.—'The Buried Ring,' by Amy Le Feuvre. Marjorie and Doris are the twin daughters of the Rev. Mr. Rutherford, a country vicar whose death takes place at the beginning of the story. The neighbouring squire, Colonel Robertson, with whom the family are intimate, has upon his grounds the ruins of an old Abbey. This place has an attraction for the youngsters, and they are wishful to dig for treasure within its precincts. Accordingly one day, in company with Percy, the grandson of the squire, while occupied in their search, they are successful in finding a ring bearing the motto 'Tu ne cede malis' (yield not to misfortune), which they deliver to Colonel Robertson, who forthwith promises the children that whichever lives up to the motto shall receive the ring for their own. The rest, all of which is interesting enough, is not for us to reveal. The story is well written and also appropriately illustrated.

From the same.—'The Upright Life,' by Charles Wagner. This work is intended by the author to be a companion to his former successful book on 'The Simple Life.' It is written with all the fervour of one who fully recognises that only some intense and unflagging aspiration can rescue life from futility; and from this aspect the book is indeed a clarion call to those who hold the belief in a more just perception of the rights and privileges of the human race.

From Messrs. Ralph Holland & Co.—'The Translation of French Unseens,' by Eugène Perrot, B-ès-L. Possibly the title of this volume may be a little mystifying, but it will be understood when we say that the aim of the book is to afford the private student practical help in the examination room when dealing with passages of French he has not previously seen. To this end M. Perrot takes his reader through a very thorough course of instruction, pointing out how he may most advantageously attack his task, and thereafter emphasising his teaching by a number of extracts, graduated in length and difficulty. In the later portion of the manual he gives a brief but fairly comprehensive synopsis of the chief difficulties in French syntax that are likely to stand in the way of the beginner.

From the International Copyright Bureau, Ltd, 34 Norfolk Street.—'Dr. Armyon's Wife,' by Paul Oskar Hoecker, adapted from the German by C. Ainsworth Mitchell. This is a play in which a loving and intellectual wife is neglected by her husband and finally forced to leave him, much to his astonishment. We cannot say that Dr. Armyon, his rowdy friends, or even the much-tried wife, interest us at all.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'The Burglings of Tutt,' by R. Andom. Mr. Tutt's exploits may become tiring if one reads them straight through from beginning to end; but individually they are all good and interesting. The ex-burglar is a genial rascal, but altogether his profession does not appear to have been a lucrative one, owing chiefly to the lamentable want of honour among thieves. The sketches have been written for various publications, but the continuity is well maintained, except, perhaps, in the final one, which seems to have been included to 'make up.' They are told in an easy style, and the book will be found amusing for an idle half-hour. The illustrations by Louis Gunnis have a certain humour about them, and fit the stories well.

From the same.—'Zeph Miller; or, a Brother's Love,' by Jessie Armstrong. The simple story of a ragged street-urchin, who, with better, more refined, attributes than usually distinguish his order, makes a favourable impression on a kindly-hearted Irish servant and her apparently cross-grained mistress, and eventually rises to better circumstances in life. The narrative runs on somewhat familiar lines, and most of the characters have frequently been encountered in fiction; but since they are of that homely, sentimental variety which can confidently be relied upon to interest the quieter order of readers, the book will without doubt have success. It is illustrated by Caroline Manning.

From Mr. John Long.—'Who was Lady Thurne?' by Florence Warden. If we answered this question literally, we should say Lady Thurne was a very wicked woman. But then, as a matter of fact, Lady Thurne was not Lady Thurne at all, only a usurper. This requires explanation. Kitty Rothery, a fresh, simple, country girl in love with her father's neighbour, Captain Thurne, in considerable trepidation asked her stylish, fascinating old school-fellow, Phyllis Crocker, to stay with them. Phyllis did not succeed in estranging the affections of Captain Thurne from her girl friend, though she tried hard to do so; but in later years, after Kitty and her lover were married, and the former was believed to have been drowned in the Indian Ocean, she again ran across Captain Thurne—now Sir Michael Thurne, having followed his father in the baronetcy—and succeeded in capturing him. Now it must be understood that Kitty was not really dead, and presently she turned up in the character of a semi-idiot, with white hair and a careworn face, who had been confined for some time in a lunatic asylum in America, and had only just escaped from a similar establishment in this country. The situation, as will be seen, was then critical, and it was made even more so from the fact that Kitty suddenly recovered her reason, and the husband, who had always been secretly faithful to his lost love, discovered her identity, though she unselfishly tried to conceal it on account of his children. The ultimate result we do not intend to reveal. While very improbable in its details, the story possesses strong sensational interest.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'Old Beliefs and New Knowledge,' by Rev. C. L. Drawbridge, M.A. To square science and religion is the effort of many men in these days of conflict, and Mr. Drawbridge's contribution to this discussion is but one among many hundreds of similar essays. He holds that there is no necessity 'for divorce between devotion and intelligence—between intuition and reason—and between what we believe and what we know.' The little volume is sensible, practical, and to the point.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Macmillan's New Globe Readers, Book V. The extracts of which this capably prepared volume is composed are taken from the works of Charles Dickens, Lord Byron, Robert Browning, Thackeray, Captain Marryat, Tom Hood, Charles Reade, R. D. Blackmore, Nathaniel Hawthorne, and others, while a number of passages suitable for recitation has been included. To each author a few preliminary lines of introduction are awarded, and the more difficult words are collected in dictionary form at the end of the book, where also notes upon matters in the text likely to present difficulties may be found. Type, paper, and illustrations are alike worthy of the warmest commendation.

From the same.—'Heart's Desire: the Story of a Contented Town, Certain Peculiar Citizens, and Two Fortunate Lovers,' by Emerson Hough, illustrated. This is hardly a novel that will attract the majority of fiction-lovers, but for those who prefer the quieter walks of life and can take interest in the humours and emotions of an unsophisticated community the book will assuredly possess great charm. The scene is laid in Kansas territory, and the character of the narrative is more episodical than continuous. In other words, the story is told in snatches, calculated to exhibit the individual peculiarities of the different members of the settlement at 'Heart's Desire,' rather than to sustain fixed attention; but in this form of art the author shows distinct ability. The account of how Law had its first beginnings in this rough, whole-hearted community is exceedingly comical, but an even more impressive feature is the advent of Woman. The book may confidently be recommended to the elderly reader who has withdrawn from the swift current of life and is content, with philosophic indulgence, to mark the vagaries of his fellow-mortals who are still embroiled in the stream. For such there will be abundant interest in the work.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Hatzfeldt Letters,' translated from the French, by request, by J. L. Bashford, M.A. The letters which form the subject of this volume were written by Count Paul Hatzfeldt from the headquarters of the King of Prussia during the war of 1870–71 between France and Germany, and were thus composed in connection with one important period of his varied diplomatic life. Notwithstanding the momentous events of that memorable campaign, he was enabled to keep up a regular correspondence with his wife, and his letters abound with affectionate inquiries as to her welfare during his enforced absence. These domestic details often form a pleasant close to an epistle of tragic import, wherein he relates the battles of Gravelotte and Sedan, the surrender of the French Emperor, and subsequently the terrible experiences in connection with the siege of Paris. The book will in all respects prove a valuable sidelight to the history of the period, for, as the Countess Hatzfeld reminds us in her Preface, 'there is also much in these letters that will be of interest to the generation of to-day, to whom the Franco-German war is perhaps a less familiar subject.' The volume is embellished with portraits of Count Hatzfeldt at different periods of life.

From the same. — 'Man's Estate: an Interpretation of Genesis ii. 4 to iv. 26, by Frederick Ernest Coggin, M.A. Spiritual insight rather than scientific investigation has been the leading principle in Mr. Coggin's commentary and exposition. His plan has been to select short passages in the order in which we find them in the book of Genesis, and to add after each his criticism and reasoned explanation. The writing is throughout learned and luminous; it is satisfying to the intellect, and it opens out new avenues of thought.

From the same.—'The Central Tian-Shan Mountains,' by Dr. Gottfried Merzbacher. The work before us is a general narrative of the exploration experiences of this intrepid German traveller, who undertook an expedition into the Central Tian-Shan, in the years 1902–1903, under the auspices of the Imperial Russian Geographical Society. The author, who was accompanied by experts as well as mountain guides from Europe, entered upon his self-imposed task with much enthusiasm after having successfully secured the goodwill of several notable Russian savants. The perilous adventures and toilsome labours of the explorers consequent to such a journey were frequently exhilarated by the sight of the splendour of some snow-clad precipitous glacier, or wonderful cataract, while valleys of Alpine semblance and beauty met the travellers' view as their route extended towards the interior. Dr. Merzbacher's experiences will be found of paramount interest to both geographical and geological students, and the general reader will derive much instruction from their perusal. The volume, which has been issued under the authority of the Royal Geographical Society as a 'provisional picture of the districts traversed,' contains many effective illustrations of glaciers reproduced from specially taken photographs.

From the same.—'Life of Lieut.-General the Hon. Sir Andrew Clarke, G.C.M.G., C.B., C.I.E.,' edited by Colonel R. H. Veitch, C.B, with a Preface by Colonel Sir G. S. Clarke, K.C.M.G., F.R.S. In this volume are enshrined the memories of a distinguished and favoured son of the Empire, and one who throughout an eventful career made persistent efforts towards securing for England an honourable prestige as a colonising power. By the enthusiastic performance of the departmental duties assigned him in various official administrations he gained not only the ungrudging loyalty of his many subordinates, but the confidence of his superiors. As Agent-General of Victoria Australia, and also in his capacity of Director of Works at the Admiralty, promotion was obtained by the 'exceptional public usefulness' with which these offices were administered. Although it was during Sir Andrew Clarke's Governorship of the Malay Peninsula that he proved himself a valued tactician, his 'practical mind' showed itself most convincing in the subsequent memorable circumstances connected with the gallant attempt made to rescue General Gordon from his 'position of rapidly growing peril' at Khartoum. We have learned much from the inspiring life unfolded in this book, which contains a fine portrait of the noble officer and commandant, and other illustrations.

From the same. — 'The Cloak of Friendship,' by Laurence Housman. The seven stories contained in this choice volume are not long, but are sufficiently interesting. They are mostly written in that graceful style for which this author is justly distinguished.

From the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches.—'The Soul's Wrestle with Doubt,' by F. B. Meyer, B.A. It is much easier to destroy than to construct, hence it is that we are flooded with books and pamphlets designed to show that Christianity, however good and moral a code it may be, is but an evolution of Pagan rites and legends, and that the foundation of it is scientifically untrue, or at least unsound. It is therefore a relief to open a book like the one before us, which is a calm and deliberate consideration of faith. Our life is built up on faith; the daily intercourse between man and man, nation and nation, could not be carried on without it; then why should it only be in religious matters that we are condemned if we see and act by faith? This is one of the volumes of the 'Little Books on the Devout Life' series, and is in every way most excellent.

From Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.—'The Rapture of the Forward View,' by J. Harry Miller, M.A. This little book cannot fail to give those who read it a better conception of what religion means to the man who holds firmly to his faith. There is a tone of strong certainty in these essays which make them exceedingly attractive, and a directness of argument which is convincing. We can strongly recommend the volume to all those who, in the midst of many and conflicting opinions, are inclined to doubt, or find their faith wavering. It will act as a tonic.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'The New Jerusalem,' by H. M. Barclay. This is a curious and original little work, written with seriousness and sincerity. The author points out that 'figures and forms are sometimes mentioned in Scripture with no apparent reason, and yet when treated as symbols they let in an astonishing side light upon the subject.' He then proceeds to 'treat the Bible mathematically,' and arrives at highly suggestive results. Many numbers have, according to Mr. Barclay, definite meanings and individual significance, and the Temple of Ezekiel under Mr. Barclay's examination reveals extraordinary results worthy of attention.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'The American Reciter and Reader.' The contents of this volume include selections from the writings of Longfellow, Emerson, Whittier, Lowell, Mark Twain, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Bret Harte, Max Adeler, and others, for the most part wisely determined upon and typical of the characteristics of the different authors. The volume is prefaced with a few instructions addressed to the amateur reciter.

From Messrs. Grant Richards.—'The Sands of Pleasure,' by Filsen Young. None who read this brilliant and, we must add, painful book, will deny its power. The preface dedicated to 'the Conventional Reader' warns him that it concerns a subject which public opinion has decided 'shall not be written or read about in books designed merely to entertain the mind.' For our part we agree with public opinion, and consider that a close and analytic study of what Mr. Young euphoniously calls 'the half world' is more suitable to a work on sociology than to a novel. Richard Grey, the young engineer building his great lighthouse upon the treacherous Cornish rocks, has reached his thirtieth year, knowing little of life and less of women. A chance acquaintance with a fastidious viveur leads him to Paris and throws him into the wild life of Montmartre and 'the great exchanges of vice and folly.' In Toni Mr. Young has drawn a wonderful portrait of the cosmopolitan courtesan. We see Richard caught in her toils—trying 'to drag her from her anchorage upon the sands of pleasure and to moor her in his philosophic deeps'—the gradual sapping of his ideals, his pride, his self-respect, until all the horror of his life and hers bursts upon him and drives him away, back to the wild Cornish country and the lonely lighthouse. But her memory continues to haunt him; he realises that only by forcing himself to see her in all the baseness of her traffic for gain can he destroy her power over him. He returns to Paris, sees her in the depths of moral abasement, and the last link of the chain of bondage snaps. We leave him watching the sun rise over the grey sea from the lighthouse which is the work of his hands. There are many passages of great beauty scattered throughout this remarkable book amid much that is painful reading.

From Mr. Alston Rivers.—'The Tower of Siloam,' by Mrs. Henry Graham. This novel, like almost every other story, ends with what promises to be a highly satisfactory marriage; unlike the majority of tales, however, it also opens with the same lady's marriage—a marriage of almost disastrous consequences. It is to Mrs. Graham's credit that she has made her story thoroughly readable in spite of a somewhat unsympathetic heroine. Marjorie is uninteresting and a trifle priggish, but our chief quarrel with her is that she is not well realised. Indeed, all the central characters are poorly drawn; they live for a page or two, and then, the author's power relaxing, they sink into mere lay figures of no service save to develop the rather thin plot. With one or two minor characters Mrs. Graham is more successful; Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Judney are credible personages and not ill drawn. A disposition to force the note in tragic scenes robs this clever and promising story of much of its power; Nina's suicide and Marjorie's big scene with Selina are both over-written. For a first attempt at fiction, the story is very promising; it is carefully written and contains evidences of independent thought.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, Ltd.—'Kitab Al Khazari.' Translated from the Arabic, with an Introduction, by Hartwig Hirschfeld, Ph.D. Twenty years ago Dr. Hirschfeld translated this ancient work into German; he now offers us an English version made from the Arabic original. Judah Halteri's great philosophical book is written in the form of a dialogue between the King of the Khazars and a Jewish Rabbi. Its popularity is shown by the fact that edition after edition followed almost from the earliest days of the printing-press down to our own time. It was meant by the author to be a book for the people, and contains sufficient attractive and instructive material to interest even those who would skip the more abstruse passages. The translation reads smoothly and naturally.

From Messrs. Seeley & Co., Ltd.—'Discourses Delivered to the Students of the Royal Academy,' by Sir Joshua Reynolds; with Introductions and Notes by Roger Fry. These discourses are probably as helpful to the art student to-day as they were when they were first delivered; and however much one may differ from some of Reynolds' criticisms, there is no doubt of his value as a teacher. Mr. Fry gives us a well considered and sympathetic introduction, and his critical and explanatory paragraphs to the pictures which illustrate the volume are of great interest, and help us to a clearer understanding of the discourses. He also prefaces each address with a consideration of the opinions expressed in it. The work is very attractively produced, and will be welcomed by all art lovers, whether they be students or not.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The First Mrs. Mollivar,' by Edith Ayrton Zangwill. Valeria Dyson's life would have been full and happy had she accepted Tom Mollivar when as a young man he declared his love. Just as she was growing into an old maid twenty years later she met him again; he had married in the meantime, but his wife had died childless. Their old romance was renewed, and Valeria gladly abandoned her life of poverty and lovelessness for one of companionship and affection. The result was disastrous. The first Mrs. Mollivar, though dead, still lived; she haunted the house to which Valeria's husband took her; she looked down frowningly from badly daubed canvases; her spirit hovered over the intensely ugly furniture. Worst of all, Mollivar constantly referred to his first wife as a model of all the virtues. The situation is worked out with deep insight and sympathy, the tragic conclusion being firmly handled. The mental outlook of the author is original and stimulating, and her characterisation is clever.

From the same.—'Fifty Years of Failure: Confessions of an Optimist.' We wonder whether any man can be judged a failure who succeeds in entertaining his fellow men—who adds an appreciable quota to the world's happiness? It is given to but few of us to take a strenuous part in the world's progress; something at least must be allowed to the man who lubricates life's pathway by the geniality of his company, his high spirits, and cheery disposition. However this may be, we can say that we have heartily enjoyed these outspoken 'confessions,' have felt frequently in complete accord with the author, and, so far from being depressed by the account of his 'failure,' have been exhilarated amazingly. The author during his career has served in many capacities and appeared under an innumerable number of guises, but the indomitable vivacity of his disposition has carried him bravely through all misfortune. It is mainly for this reason that his book supplies such infectious reading, and for those who are at all 'down in the mouth' we can safely prescribe it as powerful antidote.

From the same.—'The King's Revoke,' by Mrs. Margaret L. Woods. Spain in the early years of the nineteenth century, with King Ferdinand VII., the Desired, in the background, makes a picturesque subject for a novel of character and adventure. Patrick Dillon, adventurous, loyal, and enthusiastic, risks his neck in the exiled King's service, and a mad scheme for the rescue of his monarch gives us a taste of his noble qualities. A diamond necklace is the bond uniting the central characters; families of ancient lineage, and brigands and adventurers born of unknown fathers mingle freely under the stress of danger and bloodshed. A highly romantic piece of work, full of colour and movement; the scholarship and learning of it are undeniable, but they are purposely hidden under the excitement of the incident. A novel that should quickly make its mark, for its merits are of the kind that wear well.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.—'The Story of Stella,' by Caroline Brett M'Lean. Stella's father dies suddenly, leaving behind him a considerable sum of money, which, by penurious living and by the neglect of his daughter's wants, he has saved in order to make some restitution to those he had ruined by fraud earlier in his life. There is no will; Stella can legally claim the money; and since her whole life has been hard and sordid until now, and she longs for a wider existence with love and laughter in it, she is tempted to ignore her father's wishes. How she repents, and how love, both in its selfish and unselfish form, come to her, are told with some force. The book, however, is too wordy; it lacks light and shade, and is set too much in the minor key; but Stella's character is well worked out, and there is skill in the drawing of the utterly selfish Carruthers.

From Messrs. R. A. Thompson & Co.—'Songs by the Stoep,' by John Runcie. We are told by the publishers that the author of this first book of verse was a Banffshire man who went out to South Africa some few years ago, and became a contributor to the Cape Times, South African News, and other journals. There is distinct promise in his compositions, and in such poems as 'The Greatest Quest is Peace' and 'The Song of the Sinews,' he succeeds in displaying much poetic imagination. The volume contains several illustrations by South African artists.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'Harry Furniss's Christmas Annual for 1905.' There is a fine fund of entertainment in this production. George Bernard Shaw's absurdity, 'Passion, Poison, and Petrifaction,' originally written for performance at the fête on behalf of the Actors' Orphanage in Regent's Park, is alone worth the sum demanded for the entire number; and when to this is added contributions by H. Rider Haggard, Max Pemberton, G. R. Sims, Captain Robert Marshall, Dr. Macnamara, and others, to say nothing of a profusion of clever illustrations by Harty Furniss, the attractions of the 'Annual' may readily be imagined. Nothing more inspiriting for an idle evening's amusement could possibly be prescribed.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'A Queen of Napoleon's Court: the Life Story of Désirée Bernadotte,' by Catherine Bearne. Miss Bearne shows a marked capacity for tracing out the career of an historical personage, endowing it with interest, and, above all, showing the influences that dictated its course. Laura Permon, the subject of her last volume, as she points out, individually possessed greater attraction than her present heroine; but, though supremely interesting herself, she lived in less eventful times, was less acted upon by the tumultuous character of her surroundings. The interest therefore attaching to the life of Désirée Bernadotte arises chiefly from 'the exciting times in which she lived, the terrors, triumphs, celebrated persons, and strange adventures surrounding her, and the exalted position she occupied during the latter half of her life.' The volume is full of interest, to which the numerous illustrations considerably add.

From the same.—'The Red Laugh,' a novel, by Leonidas Andreieff. Translated from the Russian by Alexandra Linden. The contemplation of war and its horrors by a sensitive mind is a fearful thing; this short, vivid story leads us to believe that it is also a necessary thing. The average reader will learn something of the real meaning of modern warfare, and the real effect of it upon the soul engaged therein. Mr. Andreieff deals with the late war in Manchuria, and his swift, biting record is a remarkable piece of work.

From the same.—'Love in the Lists,' by K. L. Montgomery. The author does not pretend to have much of a story to tell, and we hardly think the characters he draws are very true to life. Neillina would be rather a dreadful girl to have much to do with, and we cannot help feeling that Mr. Baring, the American, did not miss much when she preferred to marry Mr. Stringer. We trust, too, that Mr. Stringer is not a good specimen of an Englishman; the fact that he is an original young man does not excuse his many rudenesses, and if Neillina deserved to have her ears boxed, which we may admit, we do not think any more of him for doing it. Miss Stanley with her complicated sentences is rather funny, but is the author aware that his style throughout is complicated? The conversation is constantly quite difficult to understand. There is a good deal of smartness in this comedy of a pension, and some real wit, but as a whole it is disappointing.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd.—'For Sake of Lucille, and other Stories,' by J. E. Preston Muddock. Mr. Muddock has preferred to traverse well-beaten tracks in his present volume. The contents are ultra-sentimental. In the first story, 'For Sake of Lucille,' a little chap with golden hair and deep-set blue eyes, brought up amid the most squalid surroundings, poses throughout the narrative to a remarkable background of priggism; and his sententious remarks and goody-goody actions are quite worthy of the best moments of Harry in 'Sandford and Merton.' Towards the picturesqueness of his career a benevolent doctor, a refined, sensitive mother (who suddenly rises from the most poverty-stricken circumstances to a position of trust), and a malevolent old spinster, powerfully contribute. Eventually rather than betray a supposed trust, even when a charming girl is willing to marry him, he dies to soft music. The other stories in their conception are scarcely any more original or artistic. Mr. Muddock has done much better than this.

From the same.—'How's That, Umpire? a Story of an Unconventional Life,' by 'Chilosa.' It is somewhat doubtful whether this can rightly be termed a story; it is rather a medium through which Mrs. Campbell, whom we recognise from the beginning as a very erratic character, gives off her opinions. Plot there is of a kind—the successful courtship of the heroine in India by Guy Campbell to the mortification of the man she really cares about, 'Jack' Ogilvy, and her subsequent wooing on the death of her husband by Lord Wyvern—but stilted conversation and endless quotation are the predominant features of the book. Mrs. Campbell is bad enough, but when she makes the acquaintance of Lord Wyvern she has evidently met her match, and the two rhapsodise and quote poetry to an intolerable extent. Eventually Mrs. Campbell agrees to marry the prosy aristocrat, but three days before her wedding morn she is found dead in bed, the result of heart-failure. The book is brought to a conclusion with some reflections on affairs on the Continent.

From the same.—'Anna of the Plains,' by Alice and Claude Askew. This is a story, rather undisciplined in its character, which may confidently be relied upon to have attraction for present-day readers—of a class. The narrative goes to show how one Michael O'Donoghan, handsome and genuine hearted as the best type of Irishman can be, on being jilted by a beautiful society girl in this country, betakes himself to South Africa and there takes service with a Boer farmer. His employer has a daughter, Anna, a beautiful delicate flower ripe for the plucking; but Michael, enraged against all womenkind through the heartless treatment he has received, is proof against her charms. Then comes along a worthless native of the soil who mercilessly snaps the flower. The Boer farmer, terrible in his wrath at the disgrace brought upon him by his daughter's conduct, is for casting her forth on the plains, when Michael interposes and, animated by great pity for the girl, takes all the blame on his own shoulders. His sacrifice is accepted and the two are married. What is the outcome we must leave readers to discover for themselves; but we may say that the ending, where the authors display the usual craving for 'curtain' effects, leaves a very unsatisfactory impression on the mind.

New Editions.—Mr. George Allen has issued tasteful, daintily-bound pocket editions of 'The Comedies of Oliver Goldsmith' and 'Pride and Prejudice,' by Jane Austen—the first introduced by Joseph Jacobs, with illustrations by Chris Hammond, the last most gracefully embellished by Hugh Thomson. Nothing more exquisitely equipped as a Christmas present could possibly be wished for, and their moderate price brings them within reach of all.—From Messrs. George Bell & Sons we have received a copy of their new edition of 'The History of Tom Jones,' by Henry Fielding, in two volumes, now published in the handy, beautifully printed 'York Library.' Those who desire to possess Fielding's immortal work could scarcely do so in more convenient form.—The latest additions to 'The New Pocket Library' of Mr. John Lane is that capital novel by Anthony Trollope, 'The Macdermots of Ballycloran. From the same publisher we have to acknowledge receipt of Keats's 'Isabella: or, the Pot of Basil,' in the 'Flowers of Parnassus' series.—The third part of the popular edition of 'The Life of William Ewart Gladstone,' by John Morley, has come to hand from Messrs. Macmillan & Co. It is late in the day to express an opinion on this insightive work, but its publication in serial form should be gratefully regarded by the very large public who were unable, from considerations of expense, to purchase the work in its original form.—The University Correspondence College have sent out the 'London University Guide and University Correspondence College Calendar, 1906,' which contains a valuable amount of information relating to the regulations for examinations to be held in 1906 and 1907.—From Mr. H. R. Allenson come two excellent volumes of sermons which have reached a second edition—'What Shall I Tell the Children?' by George V. Reichel, Ph.D., and 'Broken Ideals,' by James Thew.—William Cory's 'Ionica' has a select but faithful body of friends, and they will all appreciate the highly interesting Biographical Introduction which Mr. Arthur C. Benson has written for the third edition of the scholarly and refined volume of poems published by Mr. George Allen.—Seven of Cardinal Newman's sermons and essays are published in a cheap form by the Catholic Truth Society under the title 'Sermons and Essays.'—Dr. Washington Gladden's 'Who Wrote the Bible?' enjoys considerable popularity, and Messrs. James Clarke & Co. have just sent out a new issue in an artistic and handy form.

We have been favoured by Mr. John Murray with a copy of the second edition of 'The Eternal Saviour-Judge,' by the Rev. James Langton Clarke, M.A. This new edition of a most thoughtful and reverent contribution to the 'great theme with which it deals' has the further advantage of an appreciative Introduction from the pen of the Rev. J. R. Illingworth, D.D.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

⁂ In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo. royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = 2½ centimètres.

The Booksellers' Provident Institution

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A YOUNG MAN or WOMAN of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the advantages enumerated below, which are secured by an invested capital of £30,000.

FIRST.—Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND.—Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD.—Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH.—A Cottage in the Country (Abbotts Langley, Hertfordshire), for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH.—A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbotts Langley for the use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH.—A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH.—All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children. At the present time there are about sixty persons participating in these benefits, two-thirds of whom are Widows of Booksellers Assistants.

EIGHTH.—The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

During the year 1901 grants amounting to £1,226 were paid to sixty-four recipients, giving an average of more than £19 each.

For further information and for details of the various rates of payment ranging from 8*s*. 6*d*. per quarter, at the age of 18, to the lump sum of £68. 5*s*. at the age of 50, apply to the Secretary,

SEA POWER IN ITS RELATIONS TO THE WAR of 1812

BY

Capt. A. T. MAHAN,

D.C.L., LL.D.

'His works have become the text-books of Emperors and Presidents. . . . He writes with an authority unrivalled.'—Manchester Guardian.

'There are writers who have such a mastery of their subject that a reviewer can but approach them with bared head. Mahan is beyond all challenge a member of that inspired company. Each fresh treatise on strategy which his pen sends forth to the world is seized on alike by professional reader and civilian, by reviewer and general public, not as a book whose merits await judgment, but as the teachings of a master to be received and laid to heart reverently. To British students of strategy Captain Mahan's new work, "Sea Power in its Relations to the War of 1812," is of special value.'—Morning Post.

'The subject is treated in a lofty and scholarly manner. A notable contribution to the history of that great war and its environment . . . welcome alike to seamen and to scholars.
Army and Navy Gazette.

'Conclude a work of monumental proportions. . . . Characterised by that laborious exactness, judicial and dispassionate reading, and elaboration of detail which distinguish all the author's writings.'—Birmingham Post.

'Of great interest to the Empire.'—Outlook.

The Publishers' Circular

WHERE OVID WOULD GO BEGGING IN VAIN.

In an article in a recent issue the Bookman said: 'The present publishing season in this country has witnessed the appearance of quite a number of books, the moral flavour of which is distinctly "high." Strangely enough, this is coincident with a wave of puritanism in France. French publishers are putting the Baedeker "star" to a new use. The star, which is now a feature of their catalogues, is affixed, not to books which we traditionally call French, in an opprobrious sense, but to such as are suited for "the young person."'

We quite agree with the Bookman that some of the novels lately published in this country are decidedly 'high,' and that there really ought to be some plan for preventing the introduction of such books into decent homes. We know that in some cases young girls have quite innocently put the names of these books on library lists, and this ought to be impossible.

Dr. Butler, Master of Trinity—the most famous college in the world, according to Lord Tennyson—in proposing the toast of 'Prosperity to the Royal Literary Fund' at the last annual dinner, said: 'I am not a great admirer of the Roman poet Ovid, and I fear that he would have been hardly one of those to whom our Society would be likely to make a grant'; and then the Doctor went on to adorn his remarks by a quotation from Ovid. Imagine the poet in want, asking for bread, and instead getting a stone in the shape of his own lines—'favourites of mine,' as Dr. Butler calls them—thrown at his head:

> Temporis illius colui fovique poetas,
> Quotque aderant vates rebar adesse deos.
> I saw the poets, saw and bowed the knee;
> Each glorious bard was like a god to me.

Ovid, perhaps fortunately for him, is beyond immediate need in the shape of charity at the hands of the Royal Literary Fund, though we refuse to believe that Dr. Butler was in earnest in supposing the R. L. F. would be closed to one who has added so much to the gaiety of nations. One of the compensations which all lovers of books and 'glorious bards' and heroes have when they think of death, or having to sell their libraries, is that from some seat in the pit of the next world they may see those who were 'gods' to them in this—Homer, Virgil, Horace, Dante, Shakespeare, Milton, and Dr. Butler being introduced to Ovid by Mr. Bernard Shaw.

If we are to take Ovid—'the somewhat graceless Ovid,' as Dr. Butler calls him—as a sort of test case, what we should like to know from the Chairman of the next anniversary dinner of the R. L. Fund—who, if Dr. Butler is a prophet, will be either Mr. Campbell-Bannerman or Lord Rosebery, the latter for choice from a literary point of view—what we should like to know is what would happen if certain celebrated poets, dramatists, and authors who are, or have been, or may any day become, members of the Society were to need help from its funds? Some of them are not much better or greater than Ovid, and could not plead that they wrote nearly two thousand years ago.

Why do foreigners dislike us is a question which is often asked. Probably our booksellers could give one answer, and say that although the doors of our charity might be shut to Ovid in distress, we can find nothing but praise for the 'cleverness' of writers and dramatists of our day, men and women whose only genius lies in their boundless indecency.

NOXIOUS NOVELS.

Would that our gracious Queen would head a league to prevent the spreading of objectionable literature, which is doing so much mischief in our land. There now lie on drawing-room tables books that would not have been tolerated in a house twenty years ago; and when the mistress is absent the servants read the novels they have heard discussed at the dinner table, and so the evil spreads. Surely it is from publishers as well as sailors that 'England expects every man to do his duty,' and if publishers would only have the moral courage (the best of all courage) to decline to print demoralising books they would fulfil a brave and noble duty. Of course, a good novel, like a good play, has an elevating influence; but, alas! librarians and booksellers say the worse the book the greater is the demand for it.—Alice M. Werge, Thornleigh, Weston-super-Mare, in the Birmingham Daily Post.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of 'Louis Wain's Annual for 1905,' which the artist has had the honour of submitting to her Majesty.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. are printing a new edition of the Baroness von Suttner's novel, 'Lay down your Arms,' which has recently been awarded the Nöbel Prize. It will be ready early in January. The Nöbel Prize is worth having, being, we believe, £2,000.

Messrs. Mawson, Swan & Morgan, Ltd., send us a copy of their very attractive 'List of Christmas Books,' well printed and well illustrated.

Mr. Mackenzie Bell's concluding 'Picture of Spain,' descriptive of life in the city, will appear shortly in our contemporary the Baptist Times.

A popular statement of the result of recent discoveries as they affect the study of the Old Testament, by 'A Layman,' is to be published by Mr. Elliot Stock under the title 'A Reasonable View of the Old Testament Scriptures.'

Dr. Goldwin Smith has just completed another important book, which is to be issued by Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack. Appearing in January, when the elections will probably be in progress, this volume, which will be entitled 'Irish History and the Irish Question,' is sure of a hearty welcome from all political parties.

'Notes on Watermarks' is the title of a very attractively printed little brochure published by Messrs. Spalding & Hodge, Ltd.; it is fully illustrated, with explanatory notes. The most interesting watermarks we have ever seen are the 'boil of a salmon and the 'rise' of a trout.

Miss Marie Corelli has written an important article for Cassell's Magazine. It is entitled 'The Right and the Wrong of It,' and will appear in the January part.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE.

THE premises, at St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, recently acquired by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press for the purposes of their London business, were visited and inspected by a number of the Syndics and their friends on Saturday, December 9.

Various alterations have been made in the building, under the direction of Mr. Newton Dunn, architect. The improvements include the installation of three electric lifts, of the electric light, and of telephonic communication between the different rooms. Ample and convenient accommodation is now provided for all the departments of the business. Certain portions of the building will be occupied as heretofore by Messrs. Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., and by the offices of the Fishing Gazette and of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

A luncheon, to which several of the leading London publishers and the editors of the principal literary papers had been invited, was afterwards given at De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Blackfriars. The Vice-Chancellor of the University, Mr. E. A. Beck, Master of Trinity Hall, presided. The Chairman of the Syndicate, Dr. A. W. Ward, Master of Peterhouse, in responding to the toast of 'Prosperity to the University Press,' gave a short sketch of the progress made by the Press since the Syndics first took premises in London in Paternoster Row in 1875. Up to that time the number of books, other than Bibles and Prayer Books, published by the Press was very small. The business had gradually extended, including educational books, such as the Pitt Press Series and the Cambridge Bible for Schools, and many scientific works of great importance. The most recent developments have been in the direction of publishing more books of a distinctively literary character.

QUEER THINGS ABOUT SICILY.

UNTIL we read the new book by Mr. Douglas Sladen and Norma Lorimer, entitled 'Queer Things About Sicily,' just published by Messrs. A. Treherne & Co., Ltd., we had no idea that it was such an interesting and beautiful country. There seem to be more wonderful relics of Greek, Roman, Norman, Gothic, and other art and architecture in Sicily than in any other spot of the same size. Then there is Etna, grand scenery and curious people. The writers give one very rapid reviews of all sorts of things, with plenty of strange stories and some queer adventures. The illustrations are also particularly good. Keating's powder should accompany the traveller who investigates the dwellings of the poorer classes in Sicily, who, in spite of dirt and fleas, seem to be quite happy.

The book is in the same vein as 'Queer Things About Japan.' As the Preface shows, it is written frankly with the idea of amusing people such as the indolent globe-trotter in search of an entertaining winter resort, who will not take the trouble to read up regular guide books, and the fireside traveller, who wants foreign countries brought to his armchair.

As those who read it get to know Sicily better they will recognise that the paradoxes are not of the authors' making, but incidental to a people as primitive and topsy-turvy as the Japanese.

The serious chapters, like 'The Spell of Sicily,' are written to show the traveller who wishes to see the life and surroundings of the Classics and the Middle Ages that he cannot do better than go to Sicily.

Mrs. Goff's photos of the scene of the Athenian Retreat (page 298), the Scala Greca, &c., supply rather a fresh class of illustration.

Miss Lorimer's clever chapters have a dash of acidity, especially in her vivid pictures of visitors and natives.

DEATH OF MR. F. J. BRIGHT, OF BOURNEMOUTH.

WE regret to announce the death, which occurred on Friday, December 1, at his residence, 'Roccabruna,' Bordorgan Road, Bournemouth, of Mr. Frederick John Bright, founder of the firm of Bright's Stores, Ltd., and one of Bournemouth's most respected citizens. Mr. Bright, who had reached his seventy-third year, was subject to heart trouble. On the day of his death he paid his usual daily visit to his place of business, and in the afternoon was present at a meeting of the Royal Victoria Hospital management. On retiring to bed he complained of his breathing, and, rapidly becoming worse, he expired before a doctor could attend.

In his early youth Mr. Bright determined to embrace the career of a missionary, and with that object in view he studied under the late Dr. Eustace Condor, of Poole. He went out to India as a member of the London Missionary Society, but the climate undermined the health of Mrs. Bright, and the doctor said another hot season would be fatal; so he returned to England, settling at Lymington, in Hampshire, whence he removed to Bournemouth about thirty-five years ago. At that time Bournemouth was rapidly rising in popular favour as a health resort, and a man of Mr. Bright's keen business instincts soon saw the opportunities which the town's growing prosperity offered to an enterprising tradesman. He started a bookseller's and stationer's shop, with a department for Berlin wools, and a library, in a small shop in the Arcade. His venture prospered, and soon additional premises were required. Other shops in the Arcade were added, the old post office at the corner of the Arcade and the Christchurch Road was utilised, and soon the premises extended along the main road. They now include 14, 16, 18, 22, 24, and 26 Old Christchurch Road, 4, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 23 The Arcade, and the extensive premises in Gervis Place which front the Pleasure Gardens. Seven years ago the business was transferred into a limited liability company, the managing directors being Mr. F. J. Bright, Mr. Percy May Bright (son of the deceased), and Mr. Alfred Peach, the other directors being Messrs. J. I. May, W. F Thick, and T. A. Twitchett. Later additions to the business were the drapery department and the restaurant and provision stores in Gervis Place, and the most recent development was the opening of the jewellery and gents' departments. Thus from a small shop in the Arcade has sprung a business whose staff exceeds two hundred employés and whose capital has more than reached £100,000.

Mr. Bright took a very active part in the first Bournemouth Ratepayers' Association and in the incorporation of the borough, and though latterly he was unable to take any share in the municipal affairs of the town, to the last he was keenly interested in several philanthropic and religious institutions. He was a life governor of the Royal Victoria Hospital, and not only contributed generously to the funds of the hospital, but also took an active part in its administration, attending, as already stated, one of its committee meetings on the day of his death.

Mr. Bright was a devout believer in Congregational principles, and was a noted member of the Richmond Hill Congregational Church. He joined the church in November 1871, and was at the time of his death the fifth on the church roll. He was senior deacon of the church, being elected in 1878 and at the triennial election on Thursday last he was re-elected. From January 1880 to January 1897 he held the office of church secretary. He was not only a liberal contributor to his own church, but he also proved a generous benefactor to the Congregational Church at Winton, which largely owes its existence to his efforts. Mr. Bright married Miss Julia May, daughter of Captain May, of Poole, and he leaves his widow and an only son, Mr. Percy M. Bright.

A CHANNEL FERRY.

THE present revival of a scheme for a Channel Ferry reminds us that the originator of the plan was Sir John Fowler, who made the Underground Railway, and whose greatest engineering exploit was the construction of the Forth Bridge. He began to work out the scheme in 1864; and in 1872 had the satisfaction of giving evidence before a House of Commons Committee in support of his project. It passed the Commons, but met its fate in the Upper House, a committee of the Lords rejecting it by the casting vote of the chairman. The full story of that first attempt is told by Mr. Thomas Mackay in 'The Life of Sir John Fowler,' which Mr. Murray published five years ago. Until his death Sir John had faith in the value and practicability of his scheme. As regards any tunnel under the English Channel, we hope that there will always be some one to stop it if the question is reopened, as Sir James Knowles did when it was begun. There can be no military objections to a ferry.

THE SCRIBNER EXHIBIT OF FIRST EDITIONS.

The usual fall exhibition held by Charles Scribner's Sons is (says the N.Y. Publishers Weekly) this year devoted to an extraordinary collection of the first editions of one hundred famous books. This gathering begins with a sumptuous folio of St. Thomas Aquinas, printed by Mentelin at Augsburg in 1463—eleven years before Caxton began his famous press at Westminster—and extends through more than three centuries, almost to the modern era, in Goethe's 'Wilhelm Meister' of 1795. The most important and valuable book in the exhibition is a superb copy of Pliny's 'Historia Naturalis' from John de Spira's press at Venice in 1469. This, the masterpiece of Spira's famous press, is a magnificent specimen of book-making even at a time when books were works of art. This copy has been illuminated by Girolamo di Cremona. Of popular interest is a copy of the editio princeps of the 'Imitatio Christi,' printed about 1471. Among the rarer items are the Augustine's 'Civitate Dei' of 1466; the Herodotus of 1474; the Euclid of 1482; the Plato of 1513, besides the first editions of Sophocles, Euripides, Thucydides, and Aristophanes. Here may be seen also the first editions of Froissart Chronicles, of Holinshed's Chronicles, of Gerarde's fascinating Herball, with its quaint and beautiful woodcuts, of the first complete Chaucer in its original vellum binding, of 'Montaigne's 'Essais,' and Sidney's 'Arcadia.' For the bibliographical expert here are such choice rarities as Coryat's 'Crudites,' 1611 (John Davies's of Hereford copy), Baxter's 'Saints' Everlasting Rest,' the first (Latin) edition of Foxe's 'Book of Martyrs,' Watts' 'Hymns and Songs' (1707), of which but three copies are known, and George Fox's curious and extremely rare 'A Battle-Door' (in defence of the Quaker Thou). French literature is amply represented by totally uncut copies of the first editions of Molière's 'Les Femmes Sçavantes,' and Racine's 'Mithradate,' the latter enriched by the addition of his autograph signature, and the four exquisite little volumes of Fénelon's Les Aventures de Télémaque.' A copy of Boileau's 'Œuvres Diverses' contains a three-page autograph letter of Boileau to Racine, and some satiric verses on a mezzotint portrait of himself. Lessing's 'Fabeln' and Goethe's 'Wilhelm Meister' may be mentioned among the masterpieces of German literature, while of the English literature of the eighteenth century here are to be found almost all the famous books of that century famous in literature, many in unique state and all enriched by manuscript material of great interest and value.

A CORRECTION.

By an error in the notice of the 'Life of Lamb' last week, 'him in life' should have been 'human life.'

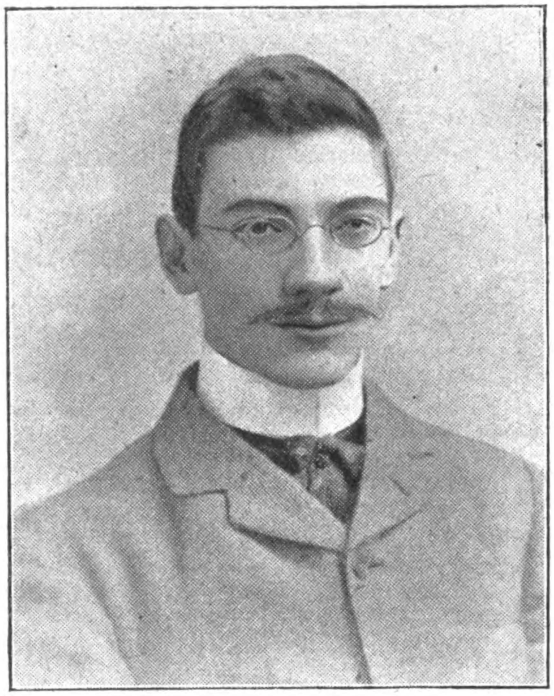
A MISSING BOOKSELLER.

David M. Murray, Bookseller, Falmouth.

[In the hope that it may help Mr. Frank Murray to get news of his son we give his portrait, and trust that the anxiety of Mr. Murray and his family may soon be relieved. The following is a notice which has been circulated by the Town Clerk of Falmouth.—Ed. P.C.]

'Missing since Tuesday, November 21, aged twenty-seven years (looks slightly older), height 5 ft. 9½ in., slender build, with a distinct stoop, and has a habit of walking with his head slightly inclined forward and looking on the ground, complexion pink verging on sallow, hazel eyes, dark hair, slight dark moustache, somewhat reserved manner, wearing spectacles, brown suit, dark overcoat, pilot peak cap, collar marked "Murray."

'His speech betrays a slight North Country accent. He is supposed to be wandering the country, suffering from loss of memory, but may have met with a fatal or other accident.



Mr. DAVID M. MURRAY, BOOKSELLER, FALMOUTH.

'A reward of £10 will be paid for information which will lead to the recovery of the said David Murray (dead or alive).

'Any information will be thankfully received, on behalf of the relatives, by the police or Salvation Army in any town; by his father, Frank Murray, Moray House Derby, or by the same at 49 Arwenack Street, Falmouth, or by

'E. E. Armitage, Town Clerk, Falmouth.'

BOOK PUBLISHING IN CANADA.

Few books are entirely published in Canada, including in the term 'published' the setting-up of the type, the printing of the sheets, and the binding of the volume. Apart from a score of books that are got out at the author's expense, some subscription books, and a miscellaneous assortment of law books, school books, almanacs and year books, there are but few entirely Canadian productions. This condition of affairs is perfectly natural when it is remembered how comparatively small a circulation the average book runs up in this country. To go to the expense of setting, printing, and binding a book which will sell less than a thousand copies would run the publishers into debt, and a sale of about that many is as much as can be expected from the average novel.

Securing Canadian Editions.

The method usually employed by Canadian publishers is to eliminate the heavy expense of composition and printing, and to purchase sheets already printed. The greater portion of novels sold in this country as Canadian editions come in this way, and though there is a duty of twenty per cent. on sheets, yet it is found a fairly profitable method. The English or American publisher printing an edition of 10,000 can sell 500 sheets to a Canadian publisher at a low enough rate to make it worth his while to import and bind the book.

Another method occasionally resorted to is to import the bound books. On these there is only a duty of ten per cent., and the foreign publisher arranges for the Canadian firm's imprint both on the title-page and on the back of the book. It would seem that this plan would be preferable to that by which the sheets are imported, but this is not the case, owing to the difficulties raised on the subject of royalties between the author and the foreign publishers.

A third method is that by which the Canadian publisher secures a loan of the plates from which the book is printed in the United States. The copyright law makes it possible for him to bring in these plates, use them here, and ship them back. Occasionally the Canadian publisher buys the plates outright.

Three-Fourths from U.S.

At a rough estimate, three-fourths of the Canadian editions of popular novels come in from the United States and one-fourth from England, while the larger proportion are imported in sheet form. Owing to the thickness of the paper on which Colonial editions of English novels are printed, they are not so suitable for binding up here as are the American editions. The Canadian publisher takes on an average from 500 to 1,000 sheets of the ordinary novel, though frequently he will take only about 250 sheets. His profits depend largely on what he has over after the sale of any one novel is closed. Thus, if he sells pretty close up to the extent of his edition, he is likely to make a fair profit, whereas if he has over-estimated the market he stands to lose.

Some authors are always a profitable investment. A book like 'David Harum,' of which 34,000 copies have been sold in Canada is excellent property. Ralph Connor's books sell up in the tens of thousands. But there are other authors whose books sell by the thousand, and yet profits on the sale of their books are very meagre. This is owing to the heavy royalties which have to be paid them. Sir Gilbert Parker and Marie Corelli fall under this head.

It may be asked whether the English or American publisher, from whom books or sheets are purchased by a Canadian publisher, does not sometimes compete in the Canadian market. As a rule no agreement is made between the two publishers, but it is tacitly assumed that the American publisher will not interfere with the Canadian market. The duty, for one thing, keeps him out, and besides this the average American book is more expensive than the Canadian book. In the United States the ruling price for a cloth-bound volume is $1.50. In Canada the ruling price is $1.25. In the case of the English edition, it is found that usually by making arrangements with the New York publishers the Canadian publisher can forestall the edition from across the seas by several weeks.

ON THE INCREASE.

The number of books being published in Canada is on the increase. In novels there has been a marked growth. During the first six months of 1904 there were 61 novels published in Canadian editions. Over the same period of the present year the number was 68. In other departments there has been a similar increase.—ARTHUR CONRAD in the Canadian Bookseller and Stationer.

PERMANENT OFFICE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF PUBLISHERS, BERNE.

[We have been requested by the Council of the Publishers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland to publish the following communication from M. Morel, of Berne.—ED. P.C.]

Berne: November 28, 1905.

No. 1769.

To the NATIONAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

SIR,—Among the proposals and resolutions, amounting to over a hundred, which have been passed at the various sessions of the International Congress of Publishers, there are a certain number concerning the public powers of the different countries with regard to the improvements in copyright matters, as well as to the suppression of import duties on intellectual products.

The National Association, and, since 1901, the Permanent Office, have applied themselves to the carrying out of those resolutions by taking steps with the Governments of the various countries interested, sending them requests and memorials, and also by writing to the associations of every country.

Other proposals relate more especially to the book and publishing trade, and most of them have been made the subject of inquiries and reports submitted to the associations.

A third category comprises proposals which are to be looked upon not so much as asking for or imposing essential changes, as offering recommendations and advice which it will be expedient to bring occasionally to the recollection of publishers, and the recognition of which, as it will become more general, will be more and more beneficial to the book and publishing trade.

That is the decision arrived at by the Executive Committee of the Congress, and at its last meeting at Berne, on November 9, 1905, it came to the conclusion that it would be advisable that those resolutions should be called to the mind of the interested parties through the organs of the National Associations in every country.

I therefore send you the table of those 'Vœux-conseils,' thinking that you will find it expedient to publish it with this letter, perhaps, in order that the publishers and booksellers in your country may take cognisance of it, in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

Yours faithfully, the Provisory
Administrator of the Permanent Office,
MOREL.

P.S.—The Executive Committee of the Congress met at Berne on November 9. It examined the report of management of the Permanent Office for the year 1904–5, and framed several resolutions, of which we shall apprise you in a future letter.

COUNSEL PROPOSALS.

The Metric System in the Size of Books.

6. The Congress desires that in catalogues or notices intended for the public the size of the volumes should be indicated according to the metric system, in addition to the usual designation of the size.

29. The Congress desires that in all booksellers' advertisements and in all catalogues the indication of sizes should invariably be accompanied by that of the dimensions of the volume in centimetres, the first number indicating the height and the second the width of the uncut volume, and that no specification of the size of the paper should be added to this indication.

Systematic Classification of the Library Catalogues.

7–9. The Congress desires that a systematic classification should become general in the book trade.

That amongst the methods of classification those which are specially based upon the decimal system should be more particularly studied.

That all publishers should interest themselves in the formation of a national bibliography, which might some day serve as the basis for the construction of a universal bibliography.

34. The Congress is of the opinion that it is in the interest of the publishers of all countries that perfectly classified and handy catalogues should be issued, and the Congress is therefore in favour of an uniform and methodical classification. It approves and recommends the following regulations: (1) An alphabetical index of the names of the authors; (2) a systematic index of the subjects; (3) an alphabetical index of the matter, with cross references.

'Overs' in Printing.

10. The Congress, in order to avoid any controversy, desires that a special article concerning the customary number of 'overs' should be added to the agreements between authors and publishers.

63. It is advisable that some custom be adopted with regard to 'overs' in printing, to provide for the inevitable loss through damage and soilage of copies, which must fall upon the publisher in the handling of large quantities of books under a royalty agreement.

Use of the Word 'Edition.'

30. Starting with the consideration that an end should be put to the prevailing confusion which is occasioned by the use of the word 'edition,' the Congress desires that in future this expression should only be employed for works which have undergone either a modification or a material alteration in the text, and recommends the use of the word 'impression' (tirage) in a contrary case.

Careful Packing when Sending by Post.

32. The Congress recommend to the publishers of newspapers and periodicals strong and careful packing when sending by post.

Articles on Commission.

33. The Congress decides that when payment has been made by the retail bookseller for a consignment sent for his consideration, without a proviso, the publisher is justified in considering those articles on commission as definitely sold, presuming that no special agreement has been made between the publisher and retailer.

Replacing of the Numbers of a Work.

35. Concerning the obligation of publishers to replace the numbers of a work in course of publication, when the subscription is void through the death of the subscriber or through any other cause independent of the wish of the bookseller, the Congress instructs the International Commission to bring the question before a special committee or a special reporter, and to lay the result of the deliberations before the Third International Publishers' Congress.

Substitution of Overplus Sheets (Défets).

42. The Congress advises publishers, and especially publishers of éditions de luxe, to keep a certain number of copies of sheets, illustrations, prints, &c., in order that they may, if necessary, be able to substitute for soiled or missing sheets or plates.

Localised Editions.

52. The transfer of editions localised to certain countries involves, for the grantee, the obligation to indicate upon these authorised special editions the countries to which the sale of the same is limited.

Territorial Subdivision of Musical Copyright.

In all cases where the original publisher, having held an undivided copyright, afterwards divides that right, assigning portions of it to one or more foreign countries, it shall be incumbent—

82. On the original publisher in the country of origin to print on all copies issued by him after the subdivision of the right the names and addresses of each foreign publisher who has acquired a copyright interest in the publication in any other foreign country.

83. On the purchasers of such interests to notify by advertisement, in a newspaper fixed upon by law or by a corporation of their respective countries, the fact that they have acquired such interests, with full particulars of the publication affected and the date when they acquired the interest.

84. And no action at law shall be commenced by the purchaser of those rights in respect of any importation of copies from the country of the original publisher which has taken place prior to the date when such advertisement has actually appeared.

Relations of the Publishing Trade to the Press.

81. The Publishers' Congress expresses the wish that the Permanent Bureau should put itself into communication with journalistic unions and press syndicates for the purpose of studying the general question of the relations between publishers and the daily press.

Responsibility in the Case of the Loss of Manuscripts.

40. The publisher is in no way liable for the loss of manuscripts, drawings, prints, plans, &c., which he has neither ordered nor accepted for publication, and which are merely submitted for his consideration.

41. In all other cases the liability of the publisher, as well as of the printer, is adjusted according to the common law.

The Need for more Complete Protection of Copyright in Educational Works.

66. The Congress desires that the Organising Committee for the next Congress be asked to provide a paper, prepared by some leading school-book publisher, on 'The Need for more complete Protection of Original Ideas in Educational Works.'

ANNE WARNER'S ADVICE TO ASPIRING AUTHORS.

'All people want to know how to begin to be an author,' says Anne Warner, who has come to the front so rapidly with her 'Susan Clegg' stories, 'Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary,' &c. 'Here are a few directions, which if explicitly followed will prove one talented—or the reverse: Write fifty stories, each as good as you can possibly do. As fast as they are finished submit them (inclosing return envelopes). When they come back read them carefully over, and, if possible to improve them do so to the best of your ability. Have a book and keep track of where each one goes, and send each to the different editors. When the fiftieth story has come back the tenth time, if not one has been accepted it is wisest to give up. But if one can persevere to write fifty stories and to send each out ten times some will be accepted.'

NEW GAMES FOR WINTER EVENINGS.

Messrs. Jacques & Son, Ltd., send us 'The Gallumpin' Gollywogs,' a new and most amusing game for winter evenings which we can recommend as real good fun. All that is required is a clear space on the floor, and then any two players can make the gollywogs race in most comical style; they are cheap (retail at 3*s.*), strong, and should prove most entertaining for the children.

An 'instructive' game is always a suspicious one, and we are doubtful whether a round card game to teach our stupidly intricate system of weights and measures will become as popular as the inventor, a schoolmaster, hopes. In their prospectus of the new card game, 'Weights and Measures,' Messrs. Jaques say: 'It is hoped that this little game may prove serviceable to schoolmasters and others, who have for years been struggling with the wandering thoughts of youthful minds; and, while adding to the delight of the pupil, may lessen the teachers' weight of anxiety and crown the efforts of both with a full measure of success.

To travel from New York to Boston affords a delightful opportunity of enjoying a night trip on one of the magnificent steamers—of nearly 2,000 tons—running up Long Island Sound to Providence, and, at the same time, of visiting the latter city, itself the capital of the State of Rhode Island, and interesting as having been founded by Roger Williams in 1636. Here also is the famous John Carter Brown Library of Americana, some account of which I reserve for a future occasion. From Providence it is but a short journey to Boston, the literary interests of which city are at once made apparent to us, on arriving at the fine Parker House Hotel, in the admirable library of which it is possessed—a library of several hundred volumes, many of which are well-bound, and which comprises good octavo editions of Scott, Thackeray, Dickens, Carlyle, Macaulay, and others, as well as sets of the more famous American writers and a good selection of modern novels, recent biographies, books of travel, &c. Space again forbids, even though the occasion strongly invites, any reference to the visits made to the historic scenes in and around the ancient city of Boston—scenes which must arouse in every Englishman a renewed and vivified interest in those pages of history which record the momentous events there enacted. Of more particular interest to readers of this journal will be a brief account of a morning spent, by the courtesy of the well-known publishing firm of Messrs. Little, Brown & Co.—a house which traces its origin back to 1784—at their admirable and newly built Bindery at Cambridge. Here every facility was offered for inspecting the newest and most approved book-binding machinery for folding, sewing, cutting, and other minor operations. Comparison was actually made between the number of cloth cases it was possible for the most expert of their workmen to turn out by hand in a given time, and the number made in the same time by the latest pattern machine, which in the variety and multiplicity of its actions seemed almost human—a comparison which gave 1,200 hand-made as against 5,000 machine-made and which showed the latter to be even better finished than the former. Another new and ingenious machine, for cutting the three edges of a book in rapid succession, was pointed out as being one in the working of which it was possible for an operator to earn as much as twenty-five dollars per week. Where so much in the way of machinery was of the latest design, it was interesting to observe a stamping or lettering machine which bore the date of about 1870, and which the operator declared had not been bettered in recent years. Of course a large number of girls are employed at the folding and stitching machines, of whom some of the more expert earn up to two dollars a day. In questioning the workers it was satisfactory to obtain an admission that the sewing of English books is often, and the finishing almost always, better than in the States. Other questions appeared to elicit the fact that the trades unions—though highly and strongly organised—are less antagonistic and arbitrary in America against employers, and more tolerant as against non-union workers, than in this country. Certainly in this particular factory—owing, perhaps, in no small measure to the marked ability and tact of the manager—employers and employed are, as indeed should always be the case, on the best of terms.

From the Little Brown Bindery it is but a short distance to the extensive printing establishment of Messrs. J. Wilson & Son, situated not far from Harvard University, from whence it takes the name of 'The University Press.' One is reminded by the date inscribed on the steps of the present fine red-brick building in which the entire work is carried on, that the firm owes its inception to an Englishman, John Harvard, the first President of the famous University which bears his name, who, in about 1640, carried on in a humble way the work of a printer at Cambridge. The establishment is a very large and complete one, for within the same building the firm have their own stereotyping machinery, as well as an art studio and facilities for reproducing illustrations of all kinds. The Press—where again it may be observed that girls are employed to a considerable extent in composing and laying-on, as well as in proof-reading—bore, as a whole, every appearance of that efficiency and ability to turn out good work for which it has justly earned a wide reputation, and the enterprise of those responsible for its conduct at the present time is shown in the publication of an admirably got-up magazine—The Printing Art—entirely devoted to printing and the allied arts. OUR CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

Dear Mr. Marston,

Your Christmas number of the Circular does you every credit. I am obliged for the trouble taken in setting-up our advertisement, and also the preliminary matter. I have got you a subscriber this morning—

Mr. J. N. Mackinlay,
Bookseller,
492 Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

Send him your Christmas number, and on receipt of it, with an invoice for a year's subscription, he will remit you the amount.

Yours very truly,
David Bryce.

SECONDHAND CATALOGUES—A SUGGESTION.

Sir,—As a librarian of a large library, may I suggest to the compilers of secondhand catalogues (especially those issued by such firms as W. H. Smith, Mudie, Grosvenor Library, Day's, and Cawthorne & Hutt) that they arrange their novels under the names of authors in preference to titles? This plan would save the time of busy librarians, and would pay the owners of such libraries. Novels are generally sought for under authors names. Yours truly,

N. M. L. A.

SKETCHES FROM THE DIARY
OF
OF THE MIDDLE OF LAST CENTURY.[*]

A Wet Dinner Party.

To-day I have witnessed a scene of novelty in the commercial room—viz. a wet dinner party. When I say novelty, I mean to intimate that excesses at the commercial table, at the present day, are as unusual as they were within my recollection frequent. Abstinence and moderation, indeed, are now the predominant features there. Despatch, with a calculation of how short, and not how long a period it will take to consume a dinner in, is now the order of the day. A given hour is usually declared by the host or named by his guests for dining, and, after partaking of a good substantial provision, with the stipulated pint of wine, business is resumed with a vigour and alacrity peculiar to the commercial character. Where there may happen to be a deviation from this rule, as upon the present occasion, the group ordinarily consists of triflers, novices, and men rather green—or those who are careless about occupying a position of honour or respectability: men whom you may meet a few times, but who are very unlikely to continue long upon the road; men whose bearing is haughty, insolent, frivolous, and gay; who are dear lovers of good living, plenty of wine, very little work, a glittering exterior, and having something smart to say. They are capital trenchermen, but shocking bad carvers.

They who are accustomed to the road in bygone days have had often presented to notice, and can consequently well imagine, a similar nice picked assembly of—I was about to say young, but not all particularly young or recently fledged—ambassadors, who, from some freemasonry, similarity of taste, love of companionship, or rather love of the bottle, are resolved to have what they classically and beautifully denominate a regular jollification. Watch them, as I have watched them, duly dressed and scented for the occasion, impatiently waiting and grouping at the window as an object of attraction passes, lounging for the approach of some more frivolous momentary absentee, snuffing up the savoury fumes of the still uncovered smoking viands, and then witness the onslaught. 'Mangling done here' ought to be reiterated in the ears and chalked legibly upon the backs of the august functionary and his sub. Look at the characters of the motley group and say whether it is possible to conjecture, at its commencement, what that circle is likely to become before the table is deserted.

Murmuring and dissatisfaction, although the table groans with excellent provision, are manifested by the majority, at either the quality or description. 'This is not sufficiently done,' or 'that is too much so'; 'these I don't like,' and 'those I never eat'; scolding and grumbling incessantly at the waiter—sending out messages (which, by the way, are never delivered) to the landlord and cook; discontented with everything, but nevertheless partaking more or less of every dish; noisily prating; pledging and nodding to each other, while titilating their palates with any quantity of white wine (finishing with a settler in the shape of a squib of brandy) till the usual quantum has been consumed; and at last worked into a beautiful glow, elated and excited, amid riotous laughter, the cloth is withdrawn. Then the table is replenished with a dessert, consisting, if not of the choicest, of a fair proportion of all seasonable fruits, and a wine probably still more fruity. Palates are cleansed, lips are smacked, the nasal organ, and the only open optic, are summoned to give their decision upon the quality; tasting and sipping, even 'the least among them' anxious to be thought a judge, although modestly, but impatiently withholding judgment for the moment till, good or bad, whichever may be the first announced (so much for the force of example!) gains at once the ascendancy. If the latter, which is almost certain to be the case, from a desire to appear wise upon the subject, the decision at once is final. Exchange is made (or professed to be made): bottle after bottle is consumed; toast after toast is drunk; and so they progress, hour after hour, drinking and toasting, speechifying and sentimentalising, tickling each other's risibility, warming one another's backs, praising the ability, urbanity, suavity, and kind, gentlemanly deportment of their president, fulsomely extolling each other's merits and virtues (if it can be supposed possible they possess either); declaring their delight at meeting with such a goodly set of jovial friends, anticipating the pleasure they shall derive (a circumstance, by the way, little likely to occur) of meeting each other again; filling bumper after bumper to sentiment after sentiment, and doing double justice to the only one that, in the fulness of their hearts, they are ever likely fully to realise ('May this be the most unhappy moment of our lives!'), spouting trash, or, if capable of giving utterance to a few tolerably connected sentences, they are, so far from manly, so associated with wantonness and interlarded with slang as to offend the ears and shock the senses of an unwilling listener who may be compelled by the peculiar arrangement or constitution of the room to be occasionally an eye and ear witness. Indulging in personalities — clamorous and disorderly — talking incoherent nonsense — till, overcome by the jolly god, their conversation turns upon the subject—the last resource for weak heads and depraved hearts—of women; and the servants at hotels, including waitresses, chambermaids, and a widely spread circle of females of their acquaintance, are in turn the theme of their remarks and the object of their attacks. Character is impugned, and charges are made without the slightest foundation in truth. Indeed, they are lost to all propriety; and, being licentious, libidinous, and uncontrollable themselves, they give no credit to the opposite sex, or to their own, for chastity of life or purity of intention. Thus they wallow on in filth and immorality, a little, and only a little, above the brutes that perish.

[*] In 1847 Joseph Masters, of Aldersgate Street London, published for the author, Throne Crick, of Leicester, a little work entitled 'Sketches from the Diary of a Commercial Traveller,' from which we give some extracts.—Ed. P C

The object of their greatest adoration is the horse they drive, and their proudest boast that they have driven the longest distance in the shortest time. In fact, the relative speed of their horses, the cost and splendour of their turn-out, the beauty and finish of their whips, the clothes they wear, the best inns and most hospitable landlords, where the best dinners are given and the best wines are kept, with the towns which stand highest in their estimation and are the most celebrated for female beauty, are the all absorbing subjects of their eulogy and conversation.

If ever they chance to deviate from this strain, it is only to descend to one equally contemptible—that of indulging in tittle-tattle, gossiping, scandal about individuals; dilating too freely upon their customers, or making loose observations upon their compeers, till, with eyes glazed and sunk, and tongues faltering, still filling and drinking, hiccuping and clipping the Queen's English, the majority become incapable of taking care of themselves, and are consequently entrusted to the safe keeping of the chambermaid and boots; while those yet able roam in pursuit of still further opportunities of indulging their depraved inclinations and gratifying their vicious desires.

Yes, thus men, some of whom have ability to rise to the very first position by the practice of prudence and industry, are, from an onward career in indolence and vice, and a determination to pervert their talents, waste their time, neglect their duty, sacrifice their health, and stupify their reason, to annihilate the respectability of their profession, and destroy the long cherished hopes of a patron or a parent.

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Making of Michael,' by Mrs. Fred Reynolds. Michael Joy is a foundling, a boy of unparalleled precocity, and a musician of genius. A great part of Mrs. Reynolds's book is taken up with his talks with Dr. John and Nan, and his conversation is unlike that of any child who has ever lived. It is painfully unnatural, forced, and priggish. Michael does not talk like a genius, and we are sorry Mrs. Reynolds should imagine he does. The story is sentimental, tender, and sad. At no point does it touch life or real people; it is a sweet but monotonous dream peopled by very non-human ghosts. Mrs. Reynolds's knowledge of music is but superficial; on page 131 she mentions three noted violinists, but at the time stated they were all quite unknown to fame, two of them not having then appeared on the public platform. Her effort to spell Mr. Kreisler's name is unsuccessful.

From the same—'Venetian Sermons drawn from the History, Art, and Customs of Venice,' by Alexander Robertson, D.D. Dr. Robertson, as his previous books have clearly evidenced, has no slight acquaintance with Italian life. He is, moreover, a keen observer, and quick to deduce reasonable lessons from what he observes. His present work will without doubt strengthen his reputation, and should prove interesting to the large community who happily combine an appreciation of art and religion. The illustrations, numbering upwards of seventy, are an attractive feature of the volume.

From the same—'The Electra of Euripides,' translated into English Rhyming Verse, with Explanatory Notes, by Gilbert Murray, M.A., LL.D. This book forms the fourth of the selected plays of the Greek dramatist translated by this English poet, whose endeavour throughout has been to present the English student with a just sense of the genius of Euripides. This version will possibly prove an inducement towards a wider comprehension of the masterpieces of the Athenian drama issued by this publisher.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Political Caricatures, 1905,' by F. Carruthers Gould. The cartoons in this book, which forms the third consecutive annual volume, are reproduced from the pages of the Westminster Gazette in chronological order, so that they form a very good summary of the political events of the year as seen from the author's standpoint. It has been said that 'F. C. G.' is the principal asset of the Liberal party, and it is at least certain that his work is better appreciated by his political opponents than that of any other Liberal. Probably the continuous yet good-natured ridicule that the author pours upon the leaders of the opposite political party has more influence upon that 'swing of the pendulum' of which we hear so much than many speeches. Anyway, we defy any person with the slightest sense of humour, of whatever political feeling he may be, to look through these cartoons without a good deal of amusement and even enjoyment; naturally, they appeal more to those who are in sympathy with the underlying sentiments, but it would have to be a very poor specimen of a man who could not find a great deal of fun in them.

From Mr. T. B. Batsford.—'Gothic Architecture in England,' by Francis Bond. The author has described this handsome volume as an analysis of the origin and development of English church architecture from the Norman Conquest to the dissolution of the Monasteries, and has enriched his treatise with 1,254 illustrations, of which 785 are photographs, sketches, and measured drawings, and the remainder consist of plans, diagrams, and mouldings. The book traces the development of the whole course of English mediæval church architecture, and gives a full analytical and illustrated account of the development of every feature of the Gothic church from plan to pinnacle. No previous work on the same subject—and we have noticed quite a number recently in these columns—is to be compared with this for the fullness of its treatment or illustration. It provides a logical and consecutive treatment of mediæval architecture regarded as an organic whole, dealing first with its origin and development and then with the construction in detail. For the most part the traditional classification into periods has been abandoned, and the author has preferred to work out the processes of development without reference to arbitrary distinctions. The usefulness of the work to students of architecture is enhanced by no less than three indices—namely, to illustrations, places, and subject-matter; and in addition to these is a chronological list, arranged in alphabetical order, including all the greater churches in the country and many of the parish churches. Great research and unlimited patience have been expended by the author; every possible source of information has been exhausted, and we have as the result a work that is simply invaluable and the last to be said on the subject for a considerable time.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Verdi,' by Albert Visetti. ('Bell's Miniature Series of Musicians.') This will be found a concise, and reliable biography of the great composer. In the limited space of some eighty pages Mr. Visetti has packed a valuable amount of information. Among the six illustrations are two portraits of Verdi, the one in middle age, the other as an old man.

From Messrs. Brown, Langham & Co.—'The Hidden God,' by Robert F. Horton, M.A., D.D. ('World's Pulpit Series.') The experienced reader of sermons will scarcely require to be told what he may expect in this volume. Dr. Horton's expository powers are not quite unknown in the land, and if prodigality of output be any criterion of success, then indeed must he be doing good work. These addresses are strenuous and forceful, showing a wide range of outlook, and are dominated by the strong personality of the writer.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Poems,' by George Crabbe, Vol. I., including hitherto unpublished materials, edited by Adolphus William Ward. The publishers of this fresh addition to the 'Cambridge English Classics' are to be commended for their enterprise in issuing this fine edition of the works of a true poet. It has been truly said that 'Crabbe is our first great realist in verse, and uses his realism in the cause of a true humanity.' His chief merits as a poet rest upon such poems as 'The Village,' 'The Parish Register,' 'The Borough,' and 'Tales from the Hall'; for in them he displays his wide sympathies, that are as fresh to-day as when they first appeared upon the printed page. The edition, when completed, will comprise three volumes, and will prove a permanent monument to the poet's memory.

From the same.—'The Care of Ancient Monuments,' by G. Baldwin Brown, M.A. The purpose of the author in writing this book has been to present to the English public 'an account of the legislative and other measures adapted in European countries for protecting ancient monuments and objects and scenes of natural beauty, and for preserving the aspect of historical cities.' It seems astonishing to the intelligent Englishman that very many of his countrymen are so lukewarm in recognising the value of those noble remnants of the architectural and sculptural skill, bequeathed us by past generations, that are still to be found throughout the British Islands. We congratulate the author and publishers upon the production of this work of paramount interest and also for the initiatory care bestowed upon it.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Thunder and Lightning,' by Camille Flammarion. Many readers interested in astronomical matters will cordially welcome M. Flammarion's absorbing treatise, so ably translated by Mr. Walter Mostyn. The major portion of the volume is devoted to a consideration of the effects of lightning on mankind, animals, trees and plants, and metals, houses, &c., but there is an interesting chapter on 'Fireballs.'

From the same. — 'The Life of Laurence Sterne,' by Percy Fitzgerald. This biography of the great humourist has long been regarded as an authoritative work on the subject, and its publication as a third edition in one-volume form is bound to be received with cordiality by the reading public. It may be remembered that in the second edition of the book, published in 1896, Mr. Fitzgerald effected several improvements, and in especial was forced to admit that his previous conception of Sterne's life and character was a little too favourable; all the same, we are not quite disposed to accept his presumption that 'licentious writing is almost certain to be followed by life and practice as licentious.' The present edition is adorned with a frontispiece portrait of the witty author of 'Tristram Shandy.'

From Messrs. James Clarke & Co.—'The Rise of Philip Barrett,' by David Lyall. There is something old-fashioned about the style in which this story is written, and many of the characters act and talk in a manner which we do not seem to have observed in real life. That Mr. Armitage, a self-made man with ambitions, should take to Philip Barrett and make him his secretary is reasonable enough, but that he should have gone out of his way to make Philip's sister Annie his wife does not seem natural, while his method of proposing was, to say the least of it, unusual. The story is not uninteresting, and if we start by accepting the characters as they are presented to us, it may be admitted that they are carefully developed along the lines laid down. We like Billy Armitage. He is certainly the most natural person in the book.

From Mr. W. B. Clive.—A Text-Book of Précis-Writing,' by T. C. Jackson, B.A., and John Briggs, M.A., and Plato, Crito, Text and Notes, edited by A. F. Watt, M.A. These two books are the latest additions to the 'University Tutorial Press' series, issued at Cambridge. The first named is an intelligently written work on a subject of great educational value. The commercial and professional writer, as well as the literary student, will find therein many helpful exercises for obtaining proficiency in the art. The latter volume is a well-printed and handy textual edition of the Greek philosopher's famous dialogue in the prison of Socrates at Athens.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Development of the European Nations,' 1870–1900,' by J. Holland Rose, Litt.D. The writing of a history of the present time is a task of enormous difficulty, not because one has insufficient material to work upon, but because one has too much. An historical record of the condition of Europe in the time of Richard I. would be a simple matter in comparison with a work such as this large volume before us; the passage of time eliminates misconceptions, and falsehoods die with the century that gave them birth. More than once in the course of his work Dr. Holland Rose felt tempted to abandon it, so uncertain did he seem of being able to get at the truth; that he persevered and completed it we have every reason to be thankful, for the student of modern history will find it an unprejudiced and clear account of events which hitherto have not been wholly free from the uncertainties generated by contradictory accounts. In writing this volume the author has shown an admirable sense of proportion and a nice and scrupulous attention to important detail. After dealing in a luminous manner with the causes of the Franco-German War, Dr. Rose passes on to the founding of the French Republic, to which two chapters are devoted; the German Empire, the Russo-Turkish War, the Balkan Settlement, Bulgaria, Central Asia, Britain in Egypt, the Sudan, the Congo Free State, and Russia in the Far East are discussed in separate chapters, and the author writes also on such matters as Nihilism and Absolutism in Russia, Gordon and the Sudan, and the Afghan and Turkoman Campaigns. There are many maps and plans, and a complete index.

From the same.—'The Risen Sun,' by Baron Suyematsu. This most interesting book is divided into three parts: 'Antecedent to the War'; 'A Nation in Training'; and 'External Relations.' The first and third parts are exceedingly instructive, and contain much historical matter which is new, or, at least, is considered from a special standpoint; and remembering the status of the author, his narrative must necessarily impress us with peculiar force. It is the second part, 'A Nation in Training,' which is likely to be the most fascinating to the general reader, however. Here we have the characteristics of the Japanese set forth and explained by one of themselves, with a view of helping the West to understand them more thoroughly. It is not easy to enter into the Japanese spirit, indeed it is impossible unless we make up our minds to divorce ourselves for the time being from Western thought and prejudices. This is not only true as regards religious matters, but in social and, to a great extent, in political ones too. Take, for instance, the chapter devoted to 'Hara-kiri; and its Significance.' If we start with preconceived ideas of right and wrong, no explanation will enable us to get beyond the conviction that the practice is revolting, and clear proof that the savagery of the barbarian still remains in spite of modern culture; yet under it there lies a real significance, a well-defined meaning to the Japanese. Then again with regard to the religions of Japan we are hampered in forming anything like a correct estimate of their position by the fact that in the West a man believes in only one religion, or, to be more correct, in one aspect of a religion, while in Japan a man can, and almost invariably does, believe in and practise three, each religion or system of ethics satisfying one side of his life and character, so that he is a Buddhist, a Shintoist, and a follower of a Japanese form of Confucianism at one and the same time. Considering the very close relations which now exist between this country and Japan, Englishmen ought to make an effort to understand the character and spirit of their allies, and we know of no better way than a careful perusal of this book, which is most lucidly written and which should certainly have a wide popularity.

From the same.—'Ways of Nature,' by John Burroughs. In this volume will be found a further collection of essays by the popular American literary naturalist, whose previous prose delineations of the sylvan loveliness of field and hedgerow, as well as his faithful descriptions of animal and bird life, have already secured him an assured reputation in this country. The chief feature of the book now before us is the debatable subject of animal intelligence, and its pages contain much information thereon from the pen of a writer possessing the faculty of observing the habits of the lower creation in forest and woodland, both widely and well.

From the same.—'Mrs. Peel's Cookery Books.' 4 Vols. consisting of Entrées made Easy, Puddings and Sweets, Savouries Simplified, and The Still Room. The great art of housekeeping has few more capable exponents than the authoress of these four little volumes, and these will well uphold her reputation. 'Daintiness with economy' might have been chosen as a common motto for the series. Not all of the recipes can be expected to show any novelty, but the volume on the still room will bring reinforcement to housekeepers of the present generation.

From Messrs. Dean & Son, Ltd.—'The Silly Syclopædia,' by Noah Lott. This little work is described in a sub-title as 'a Terrible Thing in the form of a Literary Torpedo which is launched for Hilarious Purposes only, inaccurate in Every Particular, and containing copious Etymological Derivations and other Useless Things.' The humour is a little strained, and, to adopt the American style of phraseology, which the compiler obviously affects, only occasionally gets home. There are degrees even in the sense of humour, however, and we have little doubt that to the less educated Mr. Lott's book will prove highly amusing, while of the care bestowed upon it by the publishers there can be no question.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The School for Donkeys, and other Stories,' by Mrs. Manners Lushington, illustrated by Margaret S. Dobson. Though the author may be said to betray inexperience in the weaving of fairy stories, this will scarcely detract from the pleasure of young readers, who, fortunately, are not disposed to be so critical as their elders. So long as there is plenty of novel incident they are content, and in this respect Mrs. Lushington's fancies will delight them. Moreover, there is the additional attraction of a profusion of dainty illustrations by Miss Dobson. But surely that is an unkind but unintentional hit in one of the first drawings. The little girl on the window-seat reading the book is apparently half asleep.

MENTION THE 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Bondage of God,' by Emily Pearson Finnemore. Mrs. Finnemore tells us unimpressively and without conviction that certain strange events took place once upon a time; we read what she has to say, raise our eyebrows doubtfully, and finally refuse to credit what she says. A woman may passionately love her father's servant, even though he also be her father's murderer; but nevertheless Priscilla Bagglecote never loved Henry Stables. Mrs. Finnemore is no psychologist, and she can never get inside the minds and hearts of her puppets; not only are we unable to accept her story, but we doubt whether she really accepts it herself. Though we have a murderer at the opening of the tale, the novel is not a sensational one; the author has aimed too high, her simple plot being sketched for the purpose of giving her opportunities for revealing the hidden depths of the human heart—opportunities of which she is unable to take advantage. Balzac would have made of it a masterpiece; in Mrs. Finnemore's hands it is a complete failure.

From the same.—'The Sin of Laban Routh,' by Adeline Sergeant. The reader who does not take his fiction very seriously will approve of this story, without any very definite idea of why he does so. It is told easily and it reads easily; the somewhat thin and stereotyped plot is unfolded without effort, and, if one is never really absorbed by it, it never bores or wearies. Everything about the tale, however, is conventional. There are the conventional blackmailer, the conventional great artist who stays at the village inn under an assumed name, the conventional murder that turns out to be not a murder, the conventional girl whose birthright is filched and then restored, and the conventional brothers who fall in love with her and quarrel. It is all very mild, very ordinary, very unsophisticated. The book has been carelessly written, though the style as a rule is smooth and unforced. On page 144 Stephen tells Mr. Brown all about the great competition for which he is entering, but on page 183 the author assures us that Stephen 'had never once mentioned the competition to Mr. Brown.' A practised novelist should possess a longer memory than this.

From Messrs. Thomas De La Rue, Ltd.—'The Unicorn Book of Home-Made Nonsense.' Verses by Evelyn De La Rue, illustrated by Victor Venner. Thorough nonsense these verses are, and yet how amusing!—in the last respect ably aided by the illustrations. Possibly the reader on first sitting down to a perusal of this volume will be disposed to scoff, then a smile will creep over his face, this will extend to further lineaments of his noble countenance, and presently he will burst into a hearty guffaw. By this time success will be assured, and the rest of the volume will be consumed to an accompaniment of unrestrained laughter. Children may especially be assured of merriment in the volume. The illustrations are not alone plain but coloured.

From the same.—'The Laws and Principles of Bridge,' by Hellespont. Fifth Edition. This is the first re-issue of this well-known book since the alteration made in the laws of Bridge at the beginning of this year. Its principal feature is the number of hands played out in full and annotated by the author. To this edition is added an Appendix, dealing with several doubtful points, such as an original diamond declaration, the lead of the fourth best, and one or two other matters; this Appendix is, in our opinion, the best part of the book, and is well worth reading and thinking over by the majority of really good players. It seems to us a great drawback to the specimen hands that several of them are played wrong intentionally; at least, some indication of this fact should be given at the beginning of the hand instead of at the end, as is done.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Reminiscences of Many Lands,' by A Nomad. 'A Nomad' has had exceptional opportunities for observing human nature in varied countries; for five years he has been a wanderer, and has visited China, South Africa, India, West America, and the Continent of Europe. Unfortunately, he is not a writer of even a decent style; his sentences are awkwardly constructed, and it is a real hardship to read more than four or five pages at one sitting. Those readers to whom style is a matter of little consideration will find much to interest and amuse them in 'A. Nomad's' pages, but frankly as a book of travel it is of little account. Most of the illustrations are good, but one or two are as poorly drawn as anything we have seen for many months.

From the same.—'The Dream of Phil Harmonicus,' by L. A. F. This short skit is the work of a musician who has mistaken ideas concerning his ability to write. His ideas are good, but they are very ill-expressed, and he has not been helped in any way by the artist who has drawn the illustrations. Some of the verses are neat and dexterous, but the prose is the work of an unskilled amateur. Here, for instance, is a sentence from the first page: 'It was on its way, but the tiresome part of it was, that instead of taking practical form—standing complete—and saying, "Here I am make use of me."'

From the same.—'When All the World was Young,' by W. St. Iven. It is said that every man has it in him to write at least one book—this is Mr. St. Iven's book, the work of an unpractised but charming writer. From internal evidence we gather that he is about sixty years of age, but he is still youthful in spirit, and his account of the days when he was a lad with eleven brothers and sisters is sincere, natural, and very good to read. It has evidently been a great pleasure to him (and something of a joke, also) to tell us of his old rambling home in the country, with its large garden, &c. The illustrations are of considerable interest, the author's plan of 'Benstone' and its surroundings being the most attractive.

From the same.—'The Drums of Fate,' by Robert Halifax. This is a story of low life, of flower girls and loafers who ply their trade round the 'Angel' and have their squalid homes in Silver Street. There is something attractive about Jo Galilee, the heroine, whose first thoughts are for her little brother, and whose silent love for the author, Bernard Spurr, ends not only in sacrifice but in her own undoing; and the character of Scottie Ablewhite, who loves Jo from first to last, is well conceived. The other characters in the book are not so convincing; Spurr is a poor specimen, and Miss Summerbee is hardly lifelike. There is, however, a good deal of observation of low life manifest in the book, which on the whole is good and interesting; but the end is altogether too vague. Did Jo run away with Scottie from the house at Highgate?

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Underground Man,' by Gabriel Tarde, translated by Cloudesley Brereton, M.A., with a Preface by H. G. Wells. This is a fantastic story of the experiences through which the peoples of the earth pass in the next century, from the pen of a Professor at the College of France, and an author with an undeniable gift of literary and witty expression. The 'overflowing flood of civilisation having disappeared,' there is, according to this savant, to be a magnificent future for the regenerated human race; but we will allow the reader to discover for himself in the book the trend of events that lead to this desired consummation. Suffice it to say the surprising developments arising out of such an imaginative theme are conceived in the true spirit of intellectual fantasy.

From the same.—'Magic Casements,' by Arthur Shearly Cripps. This little book of romantic tales relates mostly to Plantagenet times in our history. The whole are written in a delightful style, and after gazing through the author's casements 'upon a beautiful and restless England' we would cordially thank him for the privilege vouchsafed in the outlook it thus afforded us.

From the same.—'Odes from the Divan of Hafiz,' freely rendered by Richard Le Gallienne. The growth of the popularity of Omar Khayyâm is we imagine, one reason for the publication of this rendering of the odes of Hafiz. In a preface Mr. Le Gallienne informs us that he knows no Persian, but that he has used the translations of Colonel Clarke and Mr. John Payne, and given parts of them a poetical rendering pleasing to English ears. If this causes some people to take an interest in the poetry of Hafiz who would not otherwise have done so, perhaps some good is done; for ourselves, we find Hafiz in this dress too sugary, and very little is enough to pall; the scholar will, we fear, still prefer the original translators.

From Mr. T. N. Foulis.—Persian Poets No. 1, 'Rubaiyat' of Omar Khayyam, and No. 2, 'Hafiz.' These two little books are got up in the same Oriental-coloured covers as the life of Omar al Khayyami which we noticed in these columns a short time since. The 'Rubaiyat' is Fitzgerald's first translation. This version consists of only seventy-five verses, as compared with one hundred and one in the third and fourth versions.

In the 'Hafiz' six out of the eight poems are translated by Sir William Jones, recognised generally as the best translator of this poet. Both volumes have illuminated title and first pages, and are prettily got up. There is a short note on the author at the end of each volume.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley (Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd., London). — 'Ballads of Babyland, English and American,' selected and edited, with Notes, by Robert Ford. In the production of this comprehensive anthology from the 'Child Music of the Poets' the compiler has fully availed himself of the very wide range of the field of poetry illustrative of his subject. He has likewise appended to the volume a series of brief biographical sketches of the authors quoted therein. The book is typographically beautiful, and bound in a most attractive style.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—'The Unknown Depths,' by Elliott O'Donnell. Last year Mr. O'Donnell made something of a sensation by a lurid picture of hell in a novel entitled 'For Satan's Sake.' The book was clever, but violent and repulsive. His new story is a decided improvement on the last; its faults are toned down, and there is some attempt at characterisation. The plot has no great originality, but it is well worked out and is sufficiently exciting. We think the opening unstrained and natural chapters are the best.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The Debtor,' by Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. The hero, if he be a hero, of this story, is of an uncommon sort; early in life he is swindled out of everything by the man he thought his 'friend,' and from that time took to living by his wits. In consequence his family have to put up with many inconveniences, such as frequent removals when they have exhausted all credit in their immediate locality, and many scenes with pressing creditors. His chequered career is portrayed with much sympathy, and is in a way a good character-study; it cannot well be anything but repulsive, though the writer keeps well before us that it was the other man's roguery that started Carroll on his doubtful way. The life in a New England village is well drawn, and there is much humour in the scenes in the village 'tonsorial parlor' and elsewhere. The writer has an easy and pleasant style generally, but develops some curious words at times, which may be in an American dictionary, perhaps, but are not in ours. It is well up to the average novel, and might be above it if not spun out quite so much; however, the judicious novel reader will know how to do the cutting for himself.

From the same.—'London Films,' by W. D. Howells. This volume records Mr. Howells's impressions of London, and various aspects of its streets, life, and inhabitants. Rarely do we meet with quite what we, as Londoners, might expect in these snapshots of our city; in addition to the writer's usual literary ability and facility of expression, we get the charm of the unexpected. It is emphatically a book for casual reading, to be taken up again and again and to be enjoyed every time. The drawings of Mr. Sydney Adamson, too, are excellent.

From Mr. William J. Hay, John Knox's House, Edinburgh.—'Old Houses in Edinburgh,' drawn by Bruce J. Home. Those historically and architecturally inclined, who are sufficiently acquainted with the Modern Athens as to be imbued with a veneration for its numerous ancient buildings, will find in this work a source of extreme interest. We have already in an early number of the year testified to the skill and artistic completeness of the publication, basing our remarks on the first two parts which then lay before us, and a further issue of the series, completing the volume, more than confirms our good opinion. To the lover of 'Auld Reekie'—whose name, if not exactly Legion, denotes great numerical force—the publication should have enormous attraction, while even those who have never travelled north of the Tweed can scarcely fail to appreciate its beauties of illustration and old-time picturesqueness.

From Messrs. Headley Brothers.—'Some Fruits of Solitude,' by William Penn. This little book forms the new volume of 'Quaker Classics,' issued by this firm. The first edition of these maxims composed by the illustrious Quaker appeared in 1693, while the present unique pocket edition contains an Introduction specially contributed thereto by Dr. John Clifford. It also has in addition an authenticated portrait of Penn as a frontispiece.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Visions,' by Coulson Kernahan. The major portion of this notable series of stories has already appeared as separate booklets. The publishers deserve commendation for the very attractive manner in which they have put together this author's imaginative writings in one complete volume. Old and new readers will now have the united privilege of being enabled to peruse the whole of the stories in their proper sequence.

From the same.—'The Blossom of Thorns,' by J. R. Miller, D.D. It is a difficult task to write a devotional book that shall be wise and helpful; it is hard to steer clear of platitude, and it is not easy to avoid appearing a prig. Dr. Miller's book has pages of wisdom, and some pages that seem to us neither wise nor foolish—they are simply empty. We notice that he has written at least thirty volumes of a devotional character, and we have little doubt that he acquired that facility for writing which is so often fatal to close thought and reasoned exposition. The style is somewhat jerky and staccato; the first page has twelve sentences of an average length of ten words.

From Mr. R. W. Hunter, Edinburgh.—'The Proceedings of the Chemical, Metallurgical, and Mining Society of South Africa, May, 1902 to June, 1903.' This society has only been in existence twelve years, but already it has done some really solid and serviceable work; it boasts 570 members and 300 associates, and Lord Milner is the President. In this volume are twenty-one papers read at monthly meetings, with complete discussion on each. To show the nature of the subjects touched upon, we give the following titles of papers: 'Cyanide Solutions,' 'Zinc-Gold Slimes,' 'Extractor Boxes,' 'The Thermo-Hyperphoric Process,' 'The Theory of Misfires,' and 'Banket Formation.' Needless to say, the papers are in all cases well worth reading by anyone interested in the subjects with which they deal. Some of the articles are illustrated by well-drawn diagrams. Various appendices contain minutes of the proceedings at monthly meetings, obituary notices, correspondence, &c. There are two indices—one of authors and one of subjects.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Edward Macdowell,' by Lawrence Gilman. This is a volume of the 'Living Masters of Music' series, edited by Rosa Newmarch. The author's appreciation would carry much more weight had he a greater sense of proportion. America has not produced many musicians, and Edward MacDowell may perhaps be considered a force; but when Mr. Gilman speaks of Saint-Saens, Greig, Parry, Stanford, and others as survivals of a musical past, we are inclined to doubt the value of his opinions. This is not to disparage Edward MacDowell, who may be 'the most eminent of American composers'; but it seems to us that his too enthusiastic biographer does not, on the whole, do him a great service in this little book.

From Mr. T. Werner Laurie.—'Jungle Trails and Jungle People,' by Caspar Whitney. To see strange and wonderful things in far countries does not require particular talent, one needs only money and leisure for that; but to make other people see what we have seen, to carry them with us so that they feel the excitement of adventure and sniff the air of the ocean and the scents of the plains and forests—that requires what few men possess. Fortunately for the public in general and the present reviewer in particular, Mr. Whitney has in fair measure the talents necessary for the writer of travel. His style is graphic and picturesque, he can see and feel, and he has humour in abundance. To see something of the human and brute life in the big world he went to India, Sumatra, Malay, and Siam, and trod many places where the foot of white man has rarely been. That his book is of great scientific value we should hesitate to say; but as an entertaining and educational work it has its place in the literature of the day. The author is a born hunter, and his accounts of the elephant and tiger in particular have great interest. It remains to say that the volume contains many excellent and well-chosen photographs.

From the same.—'My Motor Log-Book.' A man may take many delightful rides on his motor, but he soon forgets all the important features of his outings; in subsequent discussions he will dispute long and earnestly about the distance traversed on a particular day, or the number of friends he took with him. In order to avoid such unprofitable differences of opinion, he must purchase a copy of this handy book. A separate page is devoted to each run worthy of record, and provision is made for the jotting down of the date, time, distance, state of weather, roads, &c. In addition, summaries are given on such points as the 1903 Act, index marks, taxes, road, rules, speed limit, road troubles, &c. The volume is tastefully got up and issued in a handy form.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Micky,' by Evelyn Sharp. Tristram was more of a young devil than Micky, though this is perhaps explained by his being older; but Micky was more lovable, and perhaps better worth writing about — though both children are very charming and very human. Their father, left alone for three months with his two boys, owing to the absence of their mother, has rather an anxious and feverish time of it. Miss Sharp's style has a note of distinction in it, and she appears to know all a grown-up person can know about children. Mr. H. M. Brock's illustrations are, as usual, thoroughly artistic and delicate.

From Messrs. Marshall Bros.—'Pages from a Parson's Pocket-Book,' by Rev. S. R. Cambie, F.R.G.S. The favourable reception accorded by the public to Mr. Cambie's former volume of outline addresses and Bible readings has led to the appearance of a second. Various aspects of important subjects are given in large type, and underneath are quoted appropriate texts. The little volume will be of great assistance to ministers and lay preachers of little experience.

From Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co.—'In the Land of the Strenuous Life,' by the Abbé Felix Klein. The Abbé Klein's visit to America is one of the most charming accounts of travel we have read for some considerable time. Originally published in France under the title of 'Au Pays de la Vie Intense,' it went into six editions in a few months, and has recently been crowned by the French Academy and awarded the Montyon prize. It has been translated into English by the author himself, and if the book does not become popular in America it will be no fault of the Abbé Klein's; he went to the West prepared to appreciate and sympathise, and he was not disappointed. His visit was one round of enjoyment; he made many new friends, and quarrelled with no one; he found a great deal to admire in American citizens and American ideals, and left the country with thanksgiving for the 'joy and moral strength' he had received therefrom. New York, Boston, Montreal, Ottawa, Rochester, Buffalo, Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis, Pittsburg, Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia were visited in turn, and the author has much to say concerning the distinguished men he met, and the buildings, &c., which he examined. The style is excellent—wit, humour, kindliness, and shrewdness being delicately blended. The illustrations are of first-rate quality.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Transvaal Problems, some Notes on Current Politics,' by Lionel Phillips. The abstruse questions arising out of the persistent problems confronting Englishmen of to-day in respect to the native races in South Africa will in a great measure be understood by a sympathetic reader of this important book. The author's intuitive knowledge of the intricacies of his subject has enabled him to give his opinions without prejudice upon these questions 'affecting in some instances the Transvaal alone, and in others the whole of South Africa.' The book, which will provoke much discussion, concludes with a long and careful analysis of present political parties and a forecast of the working of the new constitution.

From the same. — 'The Autobiography of Samuel Smiles, LL.D.,' edited by Thomas Mackay. Few authors have been more widely circulated than Dr. Smiles of Self-help fame, and this reissue of his autobiography comes à propos after the recent cheap issue of his works by the same publisher. His doctrine may not, and indeed does not, appeal to all alike; but there is no doubt that himself he lived the strenuous life. 'Adverse circumstances,' he says, 'cannot repress the human intellect and character if it be determined to rise'; and if this is not always true, it is yet a doctrine that can do no one any harm, and may do much good to those who are inclined to give up, or not to undertake, the fight. Those who appreciate his other writings will appreciate also this intimate revelation of the man himself.

From the same. — 'What is Truth?' by J. Gregory Smith, M.A., LL.D. We should have been better pleased had Dr. Gregory Smith developed his attempt to elucidate first principles in belief into a more exhaustive record of his own attitude towards the subject of which he treats. Whenever he touches a subject, he brings reason and light to bear upon it, and it was a sore disappointment to us when he concluded his chapter on 'Modern Scepticism' with many things left unsaid. His essay, it should be said, makes no pretence of saying the last word on the subject: it is offered to the public as a book containing helpful suggestions, and will no doubt meet with some success.

From the same. — 'Further Memoirs of the Whig Party, 1807–1821,' by Lord Holland, edited by Lord Stavordale. This volume completes a work the last volume of which appeared fifty years ago, the 'Foreign Reminiscences' having been published in 1851 and two volumes of the 'Memoirs of the Whig Party' in 1852 and 1854 respectively. The period covered by the present work is one of especial interest in our history, and here, to a great extent, we are admitted behind the scenes. Lord Holland was familiar with most of the leading men of his day, the men who were directing this country in Parliament, and he is able, therefore, to throw many sidelights upon history. His judgment of the men whose names and works have become so well known to us must be of interest, and although it is impossible to suppose that party feeling did not sometimes enter into his criticism of character and action, these pages are, in the main, distinguished by a spirit of fairness. As the editor points out, the Duke of Wellington is the man most unfairly dealt with, and Lord Holland appears to have had very strong feelings concerning the Duke's actions in Paris after Waterloo and his inability to save Ney from execution. The editor prefaces each section by a short historical sketch of the period covered, a knowledge of the contemporary history being necessary to understand the narrative thoroughly. The work concludes with some miscellaneous recollections concerning prominent men of the day. There are several excellently reproduced portraits, and the book is certainly one to place in the library. It is full of interest, and must prove useful for reference.

From the same.—'The Empire and the Century.'—One of the chief results of the South African war has been the birth of a spirit of Imperialism in the hearts of Englishmen. This spirit lends colour to all our present politics and to many of our social questions to-day. It has called forth Mr. Chamberlain's policy, and no thoughtful man can help feeling that we have come to a parting of the ways. It is not sufficient for the Mother Country to dream of Empire, the Colonies scattered all over the world must reciprocate; and in the work before us we have gathered together the current views of representative men and women who, by their knowledge of certain portions of the Empire, or of departments in its government, are qualified to speak. There is no need for us to deal with any particular contribution—they are all of immense interest; and since there has been no fettering of opinion, no attempt to bring the various authors into line with one another, we have a general consensus of opinion from every Colony and from almost every point of view. It appears to us that it would be difficult to exaggerate the value of this work, which should be carefully studied by all Englishmen. The contributions have been gathered together by Mr. C. S. Goldman, who writes an Introduction, and to whom special thanks are justly due; while Rudyard Kipling prefaces the volume with a poem breathing Imperialism, and entitled 'The Heritage.' Mr. L. S. Amery contributes a very able article on Imperial Defence, and we are especially glad to see that he does not hold the view that because very kind speeches have been made on both sides of the Atlantic therefore all chance of war between England and the United States has been averted for ever. We hope that we shall never again have to fight our American cousins, and the best way to ensure peace is to make Canada so strong that even her giant neighbour will think a few times before attacking her.

From Mr. Eveleigh Nash.—'The Wives of Henry the Eighth,' by Martin Hume. This is an account of the six wives of King Harry and the parts they played in making history. Our author is well qualified for the task he has undertaken—and performed well—by his knowledge of Spanish and his training at the Record Office. Much of the earlier part of the work dealing with Catherine of Arragon could only have been obtained by a Spanish scholar from Spanish records. The perusal of the work is as fascinating as anything in history, and will be read not only by scholars but by all who take an interest in our history, and particularly in the history of the Reformation. Major Hume writes in convincing style, with judgment and impartiality. The book is also well turned out and illustrated, and is a volume to be desired.

From the same. — 'The Seven Streams,' by Warwick Deeping. Somewhere—we are hardly concerned as to its precise location—in days long gone by there was a spot known as Purple Isle. From here, according to Mr. Deeping, a young girl had been carried off by the people across the sea, and it devolved upon her rough but sinewy brother, Tristan le Sauvage, to set out in quest of the abducted vestal. So with formal rites and a great blessing by the local priest, he girded on his armour, sharpened his sword, and embarked in the galley which, with its long sweeps, was to convey him to the land of 'Seven Streams.' Arrived here, his own interests, which were of an especially perilous character, for a time drove all thoughts of his sister out of his mind, but eventually, by virtue of his weighty sword and invincible courage, he clave his way through all obstacles save one. This was Love, which scoffs at two-edged weapons and steel armour, though often of a very two-edged nature itself. Having succumbed to the immortal god, poor Tristan was considerably hampered in his search after his sister; but, as luck had it, in serving his mistress he was led to the discovery of his relative's fate. What a terrible penalty he exacted from the cause of her death readers must be left to learn for themselves. Once in the broad current of the narrative they will be swept irresistibly to the end.

From Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.—'A Naturalist's Holiday: Idle Hours on the Cornish Coast,' by Edward Step, F.L.S. Most of the papers in this volume are reproductions from the magazines—Good Words, the Windsor, Leisure Hour, and the like. They certainly show that his long residence in Cornwall was not an entire holiday—as so many of his friends, according to his showing, have supposed—but a period of real hard work. Still, to allude to his 'pleasant idlings among the rocks and the rambles along cliffs and sands' scarcely strengthens the situation, does it? and Mr. Step may be advised to exercise a better discretion in future. The book, descriptive of animal life in the sea and on the rocks, is written in a non-scientific and popular manner, and may be pronounced thoroughly interesting from cover to cover. It possesses the advantages of numerous illustrations, including four coloured plates, and Messrs. Nelson's usual fine printing.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'The Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood,' by J. Ernest Phythian. This new volume of the 'Art Library' series, issued by this house, is mostly concerned with the reaction that took place in the art world in England upwards of fifty years ago against 'meaningless conventionality,' and the outcome of which resulted in the formation of what was known as the Pre-Raphaelite school of painters. Many of its members and adherents were much in sympathy with chivalric mediævalism, and this spirit is apparent in the reproductions of their pictures to be found in this book. The subject is comprehensively dealt with by Mr. Phythian in his Introduction.

From Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.—'St. Cuthbert's of the West,' by Robert E. Knowles. Mr. Knowles has carried the Kailyard to Canada—or, at least, he has sent the Canadian Kailyard to England. But he is leagues behind Mr. Barrie, and miles in the rear of Ian Maclaren. There is the usual mixture of pathos and humour, of sentimental feeling and hard common-sense; but the spirit—the insight—is absent. There are irritating and unnecessary references to the Deity on almost every page, and occasionally the author is unable to resist patronising the creatures of his imagination. If the book is a first attempt at fiction—and we think it is—then much better work may be expected from Mr. Knowles. The sketches are clever, but there is effort and strain in almost every paragraph.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'The Scripture of Truth: its Origin, its Languages, its Translations, its Canons, its Symbols, its Inspiration, its Alleged Errors and Contradictions, its Plan, its Science—other Sacred Books,' by Sidney Collett. It may possibly be thought by readers of the foregoing lengthy sub-title that the author has taken upon himself a rather extensive task, and that even one of these subjects might reasonably have contented the ordinary writer. Such, indeed, was our own opinion, but on coming to examine the volume more closely we found that Mr. Collett had been content with a far more general treatment of the 'Scripture of Truth' than his title had led us to imagine, and that in reality we had to deal with a work of a popular, not to say superficial, character, which, though extremely interesting, could scarcely be regarded as convincing. In the matter of Jonah and the whale, for instance, Mr. Frank Bullen is cited as an authority, which will probably surprise no one more than Mr. Bullen himself.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Ltd.—'Plays and Poems,' by Paul Hookham. The poetic and dramatic work contained in this volume is that of a true poet. As a test of the author's quality we would call attention to his spirited rendering of the ballad 'King Christian' (from the Danish); while the blank-verse drama 'The Cup and the Lip' possesses sufficient merit that it might be effectively transferred to the stage.

From Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.—'The Secret of the Turret,' by Ethel F. Heddle. Illustrated. The mystery surrounding the disused wing of Lochnabreich Castle is not such a terrible matter after all, but as Miss Heddle relates the story it has many features of interest. The reader may possibly remember how the late Mrs. Henry Wood would erect a deeply absorbing romance on an absurdly weak basis of misconception, and by force of her simple womanly style would enchant her listeners. In some respects, though wanting the practised skill of the older writer, the present volume reminds us of this. Much of the charm of the story rests in the American heroine's love of country life, her unstudied admiration of the Highland scenery, and her contempt for the affectations of modern society. Possessing these characteristics, it is but natural that she should fall in love with the brave, honest-hearted ruler of the Castle rather than with his far more attractive superficial step-brother; but the secret being cleared up perfect happiness results, and the story ends in appropriate Christmas fashion to the sound of wedding bells.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'The Wallypug in the Moon or His Badjesty,' by G. E. Farrow, illustrated by Alan Wright. A Wallypug book is now a hardy annual, and has come up this year with its usual brightness and gaiety. There is scarcely anything more to be usefully said on the subject, since everyone knows that it is sure to be a source of delight to every boy or girl who gets hold of it—and to many of their elders, too. On this occasion Girlie with her brother Boy and the Wallypug visit the moon, and very curious and amusing are their adventures in fairy town and elsewhere; how they rescue the fairies from the evil influences of the Hoodoo, how they visit the Land of Dreams and meet Dick Whittington, Puss in Boots, and many other well-known characters—is it not all writ in the book? And what better can anyone want?

From the same.—'The Game of Billiards, and How to Play It,' by John Roberts. The instructions given in this volume, if diligently followed, should be the means of enabling the beginner to play a much improved game. It is intended as an aid to practice on the table.

From Messrs. Probsthain & Co. (the Orient Press). — 'Lailí and Majnún,' from the Persian of Nizami, by James Atkinson, re-edited, with an Introduction, by L. Cranmer Byng. This is an Oriental mystical love story by great romantic Persian poet, which was rendered into mellifluous verse by an English writer of the eighteenth century, who, from the Introduction, we learn was an honoured member of the East India Company. The poem is permeated with the passion and sentiment of the East, and it will find favour with readers who have a preference for this school of poetry.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Our Best Society.' This is a clever and interesting story of contemporary life in New York. The characters who give life and tone thereto are placed before us with true dramatic instinct and are replete with life. Much of the interest relates to the doings of smart people and their literary and theatrical associates. The conscientious skill evinced by the unknown author in working out his plot merits our commendation, and will not fail to receive recognition by the appreciative reader.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Maud Irving,' by Audrey de Haven. We first make the acquaintance of the somewhat incomprehensible heroine of this novel when she is a little girl in short frocks, and have the pleasure of following her career through the earlier years of her life. Before reaching the age of twenty-one she is fired with the ambition to become a writer, but is told by a friendly critic of her first novel that she as yet knows too little of life. She determines, therefore, to investigate the outer world, to study character. Unfortunately for her, the man who first presents himself for analysis is the lover of a girl friend, and in closely marking his peculiarities she loses her own heart. Philip Armitage, artist, is a thoroughly bad lot, a man of ungovernable temper, wayward disposition, and morbid imagination—half a madman, in short; and one of the difficulties the reader has to face is how such an intellectual, high-minded girl as Maud Irving could have thrown over a worthy man like John Wotherspoon in favour of such a despicable being. The story is rather ill-balanced.

From Messrs. Seeley & Co., Ltd.—'The Cathedral Builders in England,' by Edward S. Prior, M.A., F.S.A. The architecture of churches and cathedrals in this country and the neighbouring countries in Europe have recently received much attention at the hands of publishers; now we have the great churches of England carefully gone over to bring out for us some knowledge of the builders who created these enduring and beautiful monuments. As the author informs us, it is an account of classes, aspects, and ideals rather than of personalities and lives, for the reason that in most cases there is no record of the actual builder or designer—if, indeed, there were any individual responsible for the complete edifice, other than the donor or initiator. The work is divided into periods, commencing with the Norman Conquest and brought down to the nineteenth century, and through each period is traced the development of the architecture and its builders. The idea is ably and consistently carried out throughout, and forms a most interesting addition to the other works, dealing more definitely with architecture, to which we alluded above. Its interest is enhanced by the numerous illustrations, mostly taken from old engravings and drawings executed before the mania for restoration set in. There are also four very fine reproductions in colour from early illuminated MSS.

From Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co.—'Treasure Trove: a Tale of the Shark's Tooth Rocks,' by Evelyn Everett-Green. One can always depend upon Miss Everett-Green for a good, healthy story, replete with human interest, and containing a fair measure of incident, and she is especially welcome at Christmastide, when so many youthful appetites have to be satisfied. 'Treasure Trove' is quite up to the usual high standard of the authoress, and in its attractive binding and general good production offers an exceptional opportunity for the present-giver.

From the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.—'The "Dawn of Day" Volume for 1905.' The general characteristics of this publication are favourably known to readers, and we do not know that in the present yearly issue there are any features that especially call for remark. There are two serial stories—in this instance contributed by Mrs. Henry Clarke and Austin Clare—a number of sermons, and social essays more or less religiously coloured, and many bright illustrations which serve to relieve a situation which might otherwise prove a little enervating.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Haunts of Men,' by Robert W. Chambers. We do not remember to have read any short stories by Mr. Chambers before, but those gathered in the present volume show that his hand loses none of its dexterity when working on a smaller canvas. Generally, they may be said to be of the impressionist variety, and those knowing the author will scarcely be surprised to hear that they treat of life on the other side of the Atlantic. The war between North and South in America looms large. Good short stories are difficult to find in these days, as at all previous times, but these will undoubtedly command the attention of readers.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd.—'The Price of Pity,' by C. Ranger-Gull. This novel can scarcely be said to compare favourably with some of the author's earlier works —'The Hypocrite,' for instance, morbid and unpleasant though that novel was. But he certainly introduces original material, which he not always utilises to the most effective advantage. In his present story he pictures a country rectory where the rector (himself a blind man) has two blind pupils, whose respective personalities are depicted with considerable power. The cleric's son, a London writer of promise, goes home on a holiday with the further purpose of seeing a young lady in the neighbourhood to whom he is attached. But he is a laggard in love, and while hesitating whether he should propose or not he is forestalled by one of the blind men, a baronet of seductive manners, who succeeds in securing the beauty's promise if not in detaching her affections. Afterwards he is overcome by a feeling of remorse —raised, as it were, to a more noble comprehension of life—and, knowing that the girl still cares for the journalist, her present engagement being only brought about by a misunderstanding, he restores her to her true lover and heroically effaces himself. As the curtain drops he is seen praying at his window.

From Mr. Effingham Wilson.—'Book-keeping Down to Date,' by Andrew Munro. The fact of the first edition of this work having been exhausted within a month is admirable testimony to its efficiency. The author has had extensive practical experience in the subject of which he treats, and the result of his training is most usefully shown in the present volume. In the present edition no change has been made in the general scheme of the work as originally presented, but the volume has been considerably enlarged, and new features of a representative character have been added. These include questions on Theory, Bills, Joint Accounts, Consignment Accounts, Sectional Ledgers, Private Ledger, Branch and Foreign Accounts, Flotation of Companies, and Banking Accounts—all of which, as those engaged in commercial enterprise will readily acknowledge, are of great importance.

NEW EDITIONS. — Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. have sent out a new and revised edition of Mr. John A. Hobson's 'Imperialism: a Study,' first published in 1902. In this the facts and figures have been as far as possible brought up to date, a number of deletions have been made, and in some instances the line of argument has been recast. It is a book well worthy of attention.—From the Astolat Press we have received some exceedingly pretty booklets containing works by standard authors. These are 'An Emerson Treasury,' edited by J. Pennells; 'In Memoriam,' by Lord Tennyson; 'The Banquet of Plato,' translated by Shelley; and 'Elaine and Guinevere,' by Tennyson. They are well printed, artistic, little volumes, obtainable at a very moderate price.—The edition sent out by Messrs. Greening & Co. of William Beckford's 'Vathek,' illustrated by W. S. Rogers, has many features worthy of commendation. The volume is light to handle, being printed on thin paper, the type is large, and there are a number of useful notes.—To their neat pocket edition of George Meredith's works Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. have added 'An Essay on Comedy and the Uses of the Comic Spirit.' The work was first published in the New Quarterly Magazine nearly thirty years ago.

We have been favoured by Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son with a copy of their new Forty-third Edition of 'Every Man's Own Lawyer, a Handy Book of the Principles of Law and Equity, comprising the Rights and Wrongs of Individuals,' by a Barrister. This perennial book has been revised and enlarged as well as being substantially improved in form. It embodies likewise 'Legislation of 1905,' and as an appendage the useful 'Concise Dictionary of Legal Terms.'

From Mr. John Lane we have received a nicely produced edition of Marryat's 'The King's Own,' with a Preface by Clark Russell; printed in large type and on thin paper, it forms a handy volume for the pocket.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have received a copy of the combined musical edition of the famous 'Sacred Songs and Solos, New Hymns and Solos, and Christian Choir,' compiled under the direction of Ira D. Sankey. This volume, which now contains within its covers 1,169 pieces, arranged under subject heads, has been issued by the publishers 'in response to many requests. It is also to be obtained in a variety of forms and choice bindings.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

DAILY DUTIES.
MANAGEMENT AND WORK OF SERVANTS.
MARKETING AND ACCOUNTS.
TRUSSING AND CARVING.
MENUS FOR THE YEAR.
HOSTESS AND GUEST.
CARE OF CHILDREN.
SICK NURSING.
HOUSEHOLD DOCTOR.
HOME LAWYER.
COOKERY IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.
Etc., etc.

In the book world, no less than in other phases of our complex modern life, it is frequently a satisfaction to witness 'the survival of the fittest' in the scheme of evolution. When the same reference books and works of counsel and advice are bought up by ensuing generations of readers to the tune of some million copies, it is pretty clear that 'the fittest' has really 'survived' all competition. Such a volume is 'Mrs. Beeton's Household Management,' of which nearly a million copies have been sold. Here is a work which several generations of good housewives have declared indispensable to the well ordering of a home. The new edition now issued has been revised throughout and brought completely into touch with modern requirements by experts of special authority. It contains 2,300 pages (about 600 more than the last edition), including hundreds of new photographic illustrations and many new coloured plates.

THE BEST GIFT BOOKS.

THE SAUCIEST BOY IN THE SERVICE. 5s.

By GORDON STABLES, R.N.

The Aberdeen Journal says: 'The name of Dr. Gordon Stables on the title-page will be enough to decide many a boy who is allowed to choose his own Christmas book. The Doctor's new yarn is a "ripper," and no mistake.'

THE VINLAND CHAMPIONS. 5s.

By OTTILIE A. LILJENCRANTZ.

The British Weekly says: 'Boys will revel in "The Vinland Champions," a tale about the Vikings; exciting up to the end.'

THE WHITE-ROOF TREE. 3s. 6d.

By ETHEL TURNER.

The Leicester Post says: 'It is a charming picture of young life, painted as the authoress knows how to depict it. She has a fresh and tender touch indeed, which has singled her out as the happy successor of Miss Alcott, and won for her the golden opinions of her juvenile readers. Her charming new story cannot but multiply her young friends, and enable them to pass many more delightful hours under the witchery of her spell.'

THE STORY OF THE GRAVELYS. 3s. 6d.

By MARSHALL SAUNDERS.

FOR MURIEL'S SAKE. 3s. 6d.

By L. E. JACKSON.

The Aberdeen Free Press says: 'A thoroughly healthy and interesting story, with some charming glimpses of boyhood and girlhood, which young and old alike will read with avidity.'

ANDY. 3s. 6d.

By LUCILE LOVELL.

The Keighley Chronicle says: 'One's mind goes back of the stories of Little Lord Fauntleroy to find a parallel to the same charm and grace as that with which Miss Lovell narrates the doings of "Andy."'

THE CHILDREN WON'T BE HAPPY TILL THEY GET IT.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S

WONDER BOOK.

A PICTURE ANNUAL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

Crown 4to. picture boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 5s.

Last year the 'Wonder Book' made a stir in play-rooms and nurseries the wide world over. Nothing like had ever been seen before, nothing like has been seen since—except the second year's issue, now ready, which puts the first quite in the shade. It is in the daintiest of covers, and contains:

300 other Illustrations, printed in various Tints.
256 Pages of Brightly Written Stories, Articles, and Verses, adapted for Children of all sorts and ages.

WITH JOHN BULL AND JONATHAN.*

The United States of America contain a population of over seventy millions. Of these millions perhaps it would not be safe to count upon more than a third of them as our own brethren, sons, daughters, or descendants; the rest are a mixed race of all nationalities on the face of the earth—all, if not relations, we hope may be regarded as friends—but John Morgan Richards is one of us. He belongs to us not only because he comes from ancestors who left England before Queen Anne died, but because he has spent a good deal more than half his life in the country of his forefathers. He is still an American citizen, though he is rooted in the Old Country. He is exempt from serving on juries; he is exempt from being elected a Common Councilman of the City of London; he is precluded from becoming Lord Mayor; he cannot vote for a Member of Parliament; but he is not exempt from paying rates and taxes!

Mr. Richards has written this book in a most interesting manner; it is not a profound or philosophical treatise in any sense; it is the genial gossip of a man of the world possessed of good common sense and very wide experience on both sides of the Atlantic.

Our author begins at the beginning, and tells the whole story of his birth and ancestry, and that seems to be a kind of introduction to a man's life which is always pleasant to read about, but concerning which any comment is almost an impertinence. This, in truth, is just the kind of book to enjoy at one's leisure of an evening in an easy chair by the fire with cigar and slippers.

Mr. Richards began his business career by acting as traveller all over the United States in the agricultural implement and seed business—but more particularly in calling on all the newspapers, his orders being 'to stop at every town where there is a church spire, a bank, and a newspaper.' He had authority to advertise some very valuable, intrinsically good patent medicines, especially one called 'plantation bitters,' a specific for fever, ague, &c. In doing this he was not limited to any amount of dollars, only he must 'create a sensation.' In this way he gained vast experience, and in 1867 he came to England, acting in the first instance as the agent for several American firms, and eventually starting in business for himself. He became an adept in the art of advertising, and apparently, judging by the grand residence he has just purchased for himself—'Steephill Castle' in the Isle of Wight—he must have amassed a large fortune. And all by the judicious advertising of some mysterious article which of course he does not specify, because that would be to make a magnificent advertisement of his book!

What he has to say on this subject is very amusing and instructive:

> 'A great deal depends,' says he, 'upon the way in which an article is advertised. A friend lost his umbrella at church, and advertised in the usual way, saying the finder would be rewarded, but the umbrella was not forthcoming. Taking the advice of a journalist he advertised again in a different form as follows: "If the gentleman who was seen to take a silver-handled umbrella from St. —— Church on Sunday attaches any value to the Christian character he has hitherto borne, he will return the article immediately to No. —, —— Street. He is known." Within three days twelve umbrellas were sent to the house, and several notes apologising for the inadvertence.'

Mr. Richards's account of his first arrival in England, his surprise at the contrast in the various modes of living between the Old Country and the New, affords very agreeable reading.

On the subject of American boots we are told that England imported from Boston alone 530,015 pairs of boots; Scotland, 59,334; Ireland, 82,549 pairs in the year 1904. 'Why,' he asks, 'cannot this demand be supplied by British manufacturers?' Why, indeed?

One of the most interesting chapters in the book is the one containing an account of his friendship and intimacy with the late Dr. Parker and his family. 'In 1886 the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and his wife came to England, on the invitation of Dr. and Mrs. Parker, to pay them a visit. He was also under engagement to Major Pond to deliver a course of lectures in Great Britain.' It was just after the time of the Beecher-Tilton scandal, and on the Sunday previous Dr. Parker, referring to Mr. Beecher's presence, slightly alluded to this controversy, declaring that he had been completely exonerated. Mr. Beecher then went into the pulpit, and said: 'I can truly say that I never felt in the smallest degree but that in the end I should be entirely exonerated.'

Mr. Richards's intercourse with Dr. Parker for many years shows the latter in a very pleasant and genial light. Then he gives an account of his own family in a way which shows that he and his wife are the happy parents of a happy group of children, the eldest of whom, Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes), has made a wide reputation for herself both in the literary and dramatic world.

The exigencies of space compel one to omit many bits I had thought of quoting. I must conclude by saying that I have felt in reading it a sort of personal interest in this volume, because I have been familiar with many of the old scenes, places, and people of fifty or sixty years ago referred to therein.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd., will shortly publish, under the title 'La France Monarchique,' a selection of chapters from forty French chroniclers and memoir-writers, designed to illustrate the national life of France under the ancien régime, and to present to the reader the whole romance of French monarchy. The entire work is in French, and the editors (Messrs. H. H. Powell and O. B. Powell) provide a general introduction, an historical précis of each extract, explanatory notes, and a full index.

* With John Bull and Jonathan. Reminiscences of Sixty Years of an American's Life in England and the United States. By John Morgan Richards. With numerous illustrations. Demy 8vo. cloth, pp. xiv and 302. London: T. Werner Laurie, Clifford's Inn, E.C.

Next week we hope to give a portrait and some account of Mr. Reader, formerly a partner in Messrs. Longmans', who died last week aged eighty-eight.

In referring to the greatly lamented and premature death of Sir Richard Jebb, Canon Bigg, preaching before Cambridge University, referred to the irreparable loss which had been sustained by the University and by all lovers of scholarship, 'a loss of personal influence and example. Sir Richard was one of the most learned, exact, and graceful of their fraternity.' It is only a week or two since we had a long and most appreciative article on Sir Richard Jebb and his work from the pen of Mr. J. A. Steuart.

The leading feature of the January number of The World's Work is a series of full-page portraits of the new Ministers —Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman being the frontispiece—from photographs specially taken for this magazine. Mr. Henry Norman, M.P., writes upon the new Government, and upon 'Lessons from the Motor Show'; while among other illustrated articles in the number are 'Building without a Builder,' 'How Dangers are Met at Sea,' &c.

Under the title of 'Benares, the Sacred City,' Messrs. Blackie & Son are about to publish a richly illustrated book by E. B. Havell, A.R.C.A., Principal of the Government School of Art, Calcutta. It is, in effect, a series of sketches of Hindu life, religion, and art, drawn from the wealth of material offered by Benares, the centre of religious life. The illustrations are from photographs specially prepared for the purpose.

We are informed that Mr. Charles P. Sisley, who is resigning the editorship of the London Magazine and other Harmsworth publications, has purchased a controlling interest in the Library Press of 9 Duke Street, Charing Cross, publishers of the well-known 'Cameo Classics,' 'Children's Classics,' &c., and we understand that, commencing with the New Year, the business will be known as Sisley's, Ltd.

The Librairie Renouard, Rue de Tournon, Paris, has published a magnificent volume entitled 'Les Maîtres Contemporains,' with seventy-two plates in colours after paintings by some of the leading painters of the day. A selection ought to make a fine work for our market, as the plates are about 11 inches by 14 inches in size, and the price only 40 francs for the volume of seventy-two.

The Council of the Printers' Pension Corporation have received 587*l.* from Mr. Gilbert Thomas and Mr. H. C. Scott, executors of the late Mr. Horace Harral, with which a pension has been created to perpetuate the name of the testator. The Council have also received 500*l.* from Mr. C. Arthur Pearson, to establish a pension to bear the name of the donor.

Sir Oliver Lodge is writing an Introduction for a small volume on 'Spiritualism,' by Mr. E. T. Bennett, of the Society for Psychical Research, to be issued immediately. The volume, which will contain several illustrations, will form one of the 'Shilling Scientific Series' which Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack are issuing.

What handsome volumes the Strand and Sunday Strand magazines make with gilt edges and attractive bindings.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons, Ltd., announce the publication of a volume entitled 'Lowestoft China,' by W. W. R. Spelman. The work will be illustrated with twenty-six whole-page coloured plates, and seventy-one pages of photographic reproductions. The author has had greater opportunity, perhaps, of studying what real Lowestoft China is than anyone, inasmuch as he is in possession of by far the most important part of the fragments discovered in 1903-4 on the site of the original factory at Lowestoft.

Under the title 'Cornish Notes and Queries,' Mr. Elliot Stock is about to publish by subscription a volume of Cornish antiquities gleaned from the columns of the Cornish Telegraph in past years.

The Christmas number of the Bookman is indeed a handsome budget. In addition to scores of text illustrations there are four presentation plates, three being tinted portraits of Jane Austen, Charlotte Brontë, and George Eliot. These ladies were not blessed with much of that beauty which gives the fair sex so much of its charm.

His Majesty the King has been pleased to accept a copy of the recently published book on 'Burma,' described and painted by R. Talbot Kelly, R.B.A., F.R.G.S., Commander of the Medjidie.

Her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to accept a copy of Mr. Mulvy Ouseley's popular novel, 'Kitty and the Viscount.'

Her Highness the Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein has been pleased to accept a copy of 'Louis Wain's Annual for 1905,' which the artist has had the honour of submitting to her Highness.

Mr. George Poston has been working for some years on a book dealing with 'Social Caricature in the Eighteenth Century,' which gives a general, and as far as possible representative, view of the social caricatures, including emblematical, satirical, and humorous prints of the eighteenth century. The work is being published by Messrs. Methuen. There are over 200 illustrations including reproductions of line engravings, etchings, mezzotints, stipple, and a few original drawings by Rowlandson.

'A School History of Middlesex,' by Mr. Victor Plarr and Mr. F. W. Walton, is the second volume of the series to be issued by Messrs. Methuen. The book is embellished with many illustrations, some modern, some from old and rare prints, and there are also maps and plans.

Messrs. Methuen are also issuing Mr. J. G. Anderson's book 'Exercices de la Nouvelle Grammaire Française.' This is a drill book for use in connection with the 'Nouvelle Grammaire' to be issued shortly, but it can also be issued with any of the well-known grammars of the Reform Method.

The publication of 'Poems of the Inner Life'—a selection by the late Mr. F. Crompton Jones, has now been taken over by Messrs. Methuen, and a cheaper edition will be issued very shortly.

A really good cedar pencil is a blessing. For desk use, for scribbling notes and other odd work, we can recommend Messrs. G. Rowney & Co.'s Queen Victoria B; it run over the paper as smoothly as a pneumatic tyre over asphalte, and the wood is as good as the lead, so it sharpens easily.

De Foe's 'Robinson Crusoe' has always been a favourite in France, and the Librairie Renouard has just published a new edition with clever illustrations in colours and black and white, by G. Fraipont.

Some 'first editions' at very moderate prices will be found in the 334th catalogue of Mr. Edward Baker, 15 John Bright Street, Birmingham, including Dickens, Lamb, Lang, Milton (two Italian editions of 1674 and 1676), Rossetti, Ruskin, Tennyson, &c.

The Early English Drama Society, of 18 Bury Street, Bloomsbury, announce as 'now printing' the first series of twelve volumes of the writings of the Early English dramatists. Each volume is to have a Note-book and Word-list in one alphabet, containing biographical notes, contemporary references, variorum readings, glossary, &c. The first twelve volumes of this most interesting enterprise will include the complete works of John Heywood (1497–1580), the dramatic writings of John Bale (Bishop of Ossory), of Nicholas Udall (1506–1566), of Richard Edwards (1513–1566), of John Wever and John Ingleland, of Ulpian Fulwell (1562), as well as four series of anonymous plays. A prospectus giving many more details than we have space for can be had at the address given above. We agree with Dr. Furnivall that every professor of English ought to have this series, and that it might run for a hundred years as far as material goes.

Our readers will remember the story we had in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR two or three weeks ago, about the bookseller who told his customer he didn't stock Browning because he couldn't understand him, and when the lady asked him if he had 'Praed' said yes, but it was no good. We found the story in the Publishers' Weekly and said so. Recently it has been going round the evening and other papers as given by 'Lady Phyllis' in the Bystander—naughty 'Lady Phyllis.'

The works of that fine old English sportsman, Mr. George Rooper, who died the other day in his ninety-fourth year, are known to many of our readers. Mr. Rooper went to the Hebrides for trout-fishing last summer, and hunted regularly up to a few years ago. Longman's Magazine had one or two very pleasant articles by him a year or so ago, giving reminiscences of Early Victorian times. He was born in 1812. His writings included 'The Autobiography of the late Salmo Salar, Esq.' (1867); 'Flood, Field, and Forest' (1869) (this went into several editions); 'Thames and Tweed' (1870) (this also went through several editions); 'A Month in Mayo' (1876).

Miss Myra Hamilton's volume of fairy tales, 'Kingdoms Curious,' published by Mr. Heinemann, is among the Christmas gifts of the children of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and will no doubt delight them as much as it does many children among the King's subjects who revel in its possession throughout the country.

In their very useful monthly list of new books for December, Messrs. John Menzies & Co. say: 'With the month of December and the approach of Christmas, the book season reaches its height. The season began well, the promise of the opening weeks has been well maintained, and there is every indication that the remaining weeks of the season will bring with them a measure of business which will be satisfactory to the bookseller in town and country.'

The best golf story we have read for a long time is 'The Vicar's Medal Score' in the Christmas (December 15) number of Golf Illustrated, by Mr. Lincoln Springfield, a number which no golfer should 'miss.'

MR. CHARLES SISLEY.

Messrs. Henry Sotheran & Co. send us a handsome, well-printed list extending to over 130 pages, forming a classified catalogue of second-hand works on history, ancient and modern, with a supplement of newly bound books. If we envy anybody it is the man who has leisure and money who can go through a catalogue like this and select what he wants.

We are informed that 'in his volume, "The Reunion of English Christendom" (just published by the National Free Church Council), Dr. Horton, in dealing with the debt the Established Church owes to Nonconformity, says he ventures to make a challenge: "Examine in any parish throughout the country, the clergy, the teachers, the visitors, the workers who are doing anything for the real progress of religion, and, if your experience is like mine, you will find that about half of them are Dissenters by origin. In the free and strenuous life of the non-Episcopal Churches they have acquired the grit and developed the powers which they now devote to the services of the Established Church." Dr. Horton cites striking examples in support of his case.' It seems to us that Dr. Horton's argument is more complimentary to the Established Church than to his own.

MR. CHARLES SISLEY.

MR. CHARLES P. SISLEY, the latest recruit to the ranks of publishers, is a comparatively young man, being only in the middle thirties. He has just resigned the editorship of the London Magazine and other Harmsworth periodicals to acquire a controlling interest in the Library Press, a firm which has successfully issued 'The Cameo Classics,' 'The Children's Classics,' and other dainty series of reprints. In future it will be known as Sisley's, Ltd. Mr. Sisley has been for fifteen years an editor. In 1891, soon after reaching man's estate, he helped to start Cycling. Subsequently he edited The Cycle, and since has been associated with Carmelite House and its publications. One of the new series being commenced by Sisley's, Ltd., is a shilling illustrated library of 'The World's Novels,' and during this year the new publishing house promises a variety of original books as well.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARIES.

'Librarians should be warned that the two following reference publications are identical, save for a fresh introduction and the occasional cutting of the "Lamb" plates in order to introduce here and there a few additional and usually unimportant biographical sketches, thus making it quite undesirable to purchase both sets:

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY of notable Americans. Brief Biographies of authors, administrators, clergymen, commanders, editors, engineers, jurists, merchants, officials, philanthropists, scientists, statesmen, and others who are making American history. Editor-in-chief, Rossiter Johnson, Ph.D., LL.D.; managing editor, John Howard Brown. Boston: The Biographical Society. 1904. 10 vols.

'It is unnecessary to comment on a performance of this sort—wherein, without essential change of text, the title-page, the introduction, the names of the editors, the number of volumes, and the name of the publishers are all changed, with the effect of leading library order departments astray. There is no hint in Rossiter Johnson's introduction to "Notable Americans" connecting his work with the previous publication of Lamb.'

Free Insurance of £100 against Accidents when Travelling, for 'Publishers' Circular' Readers in the United Kingdom.

With the first number for the New Year our readers will all be insured against accident when travelling, not only by train, but also by tram, motor 'bus, or any other passenger vehicle. WARD, LOCK & CO.'S STAFF SUPPER.

ON Friday, December 15, the twelfth Annual Supper of the Warwick House Staff was held at the City of New York Restaurant, Bedford Row. The chairman for the evening was Mr. J. Joanes, manager of the town department. A feature of these celebrations is that the chair is taken in rotation according to length of service. Mr. Joanes's title to the honour consists of the comparatively modest record of twenty-three years, but most of his predecessors have boasted of over thirty years. With a keen sense of the appropriate, the stewards saw that every diner was presented with a bunch of blue violets, the emblem of 'faithfulness.' Another suggestive emblem was the violin which appeared on the cover of the very artistic programme, an allusion to Mr. Joanes's well-known skill as an instrumentalist, a skill which has always been freely placed at the service of his colleagues on social occasions.

MR. JOANES,
Town Manager (Ward, Lock & Co, Limited.)

After the usual loyal toasts, the health of the Chairman was proposed by Mr. Henry J. Cooper, the senior town traveller, who has himself seen thirty-six years' service with the firm. Then, on behalf of the town department, Mr. A. E. Grubb presented Mr. Joanes with a travelling-bag and an umbrella, as a token of esteem. Mr. Joanes, in reply, touched upon his 'past' with a lightness that gave no promise of material for the writer of problem plays. The toast of 'Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.,' was proposed by Mr. H. S. Thomas, manager of the advertisement department, and that of 'Our Colleagues, past and present,' by Mr. T. B. Jackson. Several visitors who have been present on a number of these occasions were declared by Mr. Jackson to have won their right to be numbered among the honourable band of 'colleagues.' Visitors other than 'colleagues' were toasted by Mr. A. E. Grubb. Amongst the former were: Messrs. Cox, Bartley, Hardy, Beable, Whiston; and the visitors included Messrs. Widdrington, Barton, Dingley, and others; also Mr. Walker, who is on a business visit from Canada.

During the evening, songs were sung by Messrs. Ernest Hughes, S. Kemble, J. F. Archer, Robert H. Tickle, Henry Lowe, George T. Norton, and E. J. Burnham. Mr. David Dennis gave an amusing musical monologue and Mr. R. H. Tickle a pianoforte solo. The arrangements were in the hands of Mr. T. B. Jackson, head of the export department, who last year himself occupied the chair.

MARK TWAIN AT 'THREE SCORE YEARS AND TEN.'

MARK TWAIN (Samuel Langhorne Clemens), on November 30 celebrated his seventieth birthday, having been born on that day in 1835, in Florida, Mo. Mr. Clemens at the age of thirteen was apprenticed to a printer, and for some time worked at 'the case,' travelling from town to town till he reached New York. From there he went to New Orleans, and became pilot on one of the Mississippi steamboats. In 1867 he went to Nevada as private secretary to his brother, who had been made Secretary of the Territory. He engaged in mining in Nevada, and in 1862 he became editor of the Virginia City Enterprise. In 1865 he went to San Francisco, where he was engaged as a reporter on the Morning Call. After experimenting again in gold mining he resumed his work for the California press, and in 1866 visited Hawaii as newspaper correspondent.

After his return from Hawaii Mr. Clemens delivered humorous lectures in California and Nevada, and then came East, where in 1867 he published the 'Jumping Frog.' In the same year he went with a party of tourists to the Holy Land, publishing on his return the 'Innocents Abroad' (Hartford, 1869), of which 125,000 copies were sold in three years. For a time he edited the Buffalo (N.Y.) Express, and after his marriage, in 1870, settled in Hartford, Conn. Since then he has travelled and lectured extensively, his great tour de force being a lecture tour around the world to secure money enough to pay in full the creditors of the firm of C. L. Webster & Co., in which he was a silent partner.

Few humorists in the range of literature have drawn more closely to the popular heart or have played more subtly and powerfully upon the sense of the ludicrous inherent in human nature than has Mark Twain. Yet the finer emotions of pathos and sympathy are no less awakened by the magic influence at Mr. Clemens's command. There is inwrought in his most convulsing extravaganzas always a touch of intensely human experience, to which the most indifferent sensibilities are compelled to respond, and, while scorning to point a moral in the conventional manner, Mark Twain unconsciously reaches the depths of life and character in his philosophy of laughter and the evident feeling he betrays. May he live many years longer to fill the world with laughter and to remind it of its responsibilities, is the sincere wish of his many admirers.

Colonel Harvey, on December 5, gave a dinner to the septuagenarian at Delmonico's, in New York City. Upwards of one hundred and fifty prominent literary men and the editorial staff of Harper's were present.—New York Publishers' Weekly.

BOOKS THE SOLACE OF AGE, THE JOY OF YOUTH—THREE GENERATIONS.

We have to thank Mr. S. W. Simms, of Bath, now in his ninety-sixth year, and probably the oldest living bookseller, on our planet, at any rate, for the loan of the illustrations on this page, from a very nicely printed price list which he has just published.

We are sure that, in the name of the whole book trade, we may send Mr. Simms all good and seasonable wishes and congratulate him on still being able to find solace in books after dealing in them so many years.

The following lines were written to commemorate the Hundredth Anniversary of the firm's establishment:—

In the dim dawning of the Century,
When Thackeray and Dickens were unborn,
When by that undistinguished poet, Pye,
The Wreath * was worn;

Yes, even then the connoisseur, who sought
To keep abreast of literary whims,
The last production of the moment bought
From Mr. Simms.

Strangely unreal they seem, those early days;
Poets and Novelists have come—and gone.
But still, 'The Business,' in the common phrase,
'Is carried on.'

And still the purchaser who loves a book,
Whether it be prose, poetry, or hymns,
Now, as a Century ago, can look
To Mr. Simms.

* The Poet Laureate's Wreath. Pye was succeeded by Southey in 1813.

'THE SPEAKING TOY-BOOK.'

Messrs. H. Grevel & Co., of 33 King Street, Covent Garden, send us a real novelty in Toy-Books 'dedicated to all children.' It is a series of coloured plates of 'The Cock, the Goat, the Cat, the Bird, the Lamb, and the Cuckoo.' On the title-page we are told that

> 'Pictures, Rhymes, and Speech combined
> Within this charming book you'll find.'

The novelty consists in the fact that the small owner of the book by pulling a little cord with a knob attached, he or she can make the cock crow, the cat 'meaw,' the goat bleat, the bird whistle, the lamb 'baa,' and the cuckoo cuck-koo—in a very amusing manner.

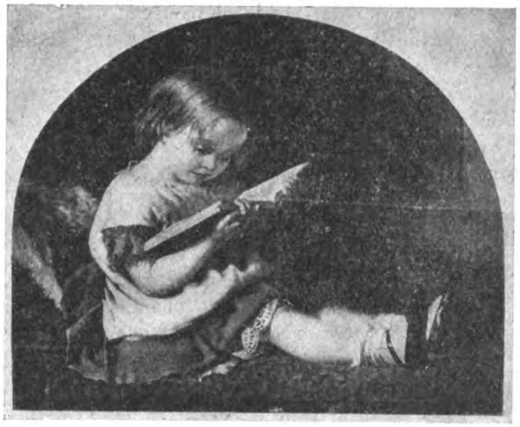
If allowed to 'speak,' this Toy-Book will sell itself. Its only drawback is that it is bound to create an insatiable thirst for knowledge as to how it works, and so must be kept for nursery state occasions.

Mention the 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the Publishers' Circular will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

THE EDINBURGH TYPOGRAPHIA ASSOCIATION AND ANCIENT EDINBURGH.

The Edinburgh Typographia Association has recently entered upon the eighteenth session of its useful labours. During all those past years it has rendered most essential service to the younger branches of the printing trade, having for its objects the technical, artistic, and educational advancement of its members in all that is embraced in the art of printing.

MR. S. SIMMS. The Founder of the Firm (Estd. 1800). Died 1854. Aged 82.



MISS FAIRY TALES'—Her Fifth Birthday.

On Monday evening, December 13, the fourth lecture of the present course was delivered by Mr. Richard Cameron, F.S.A.Scot., in the hall of the Protestant Institute, George IV. Bridge. The subject of lecture was 'Ancient Edinburgh and its Curious Every-day Life.' Mr. James Wilkie (of Messrs. Neill & Co.) presided, and there was an excellent attendance. The Chairman, in a few appropriate remarks, introduced the lecturer, and referred to the interesting nature of the subject in hand.

Mr. Cameron began by saying he proposed to give a description or account of ancient Edinburgh as it would appear from four to five hundred years ago and onwards, together with an approximate delineation of the manners, customs, and every-day life of the ancient citizens. For many years there had been a growing desire in literary and other circles for information regarding burghal life in Scotland in ancient times. Details as to manners, customs, laws, and civic affairs could scarcely be expected in ordinary histories, these being chiefly devoted to political and ecclesiastical, rather than to social matters and every-day life. An important means of elucidating such information consisted in the founding of literary book-clubs. An interesting account of such was given, including the Bannatyne Club, with Sir Walter Scott as its president; the Maitland Club, the Abbotsford Club, the Spalding Club, the Antiquarian, and the Burgh Records Society. These book-clubs were sustained and promoted by eminent literary Scotsmen, and were the means of rescuing from oblivion and printing many rare and valuable manuscript works relating to Scottish affairs, embracing much curious and interesting matters regarding social, domestic, and burghal concerns in Scotland in bygone times. Interesting accounts were here given of the building of the first city wall in the year 1450, and of the Flodden wall in 1513; also of the North Loch, which existed for centuries, and was wont to be used for the ducking and drowning of females for minor or more serious offences. The extensive powers of the magistrates were also referred to, even to the infliction of the death penalty. Illustrations of their cruel and barbarous punishments, such as burning on the cheeks, boring the tongue, nailing the ear to the tron, nose-pinching, whipping at the cart-tail by the city hangman, &c. Many curious illustrations were also given as to the frequent visitations of pestilence and its deadly results. The want of drainage and sanitation combined with foul habits of the population proved most injurious to the inhabitants. Interesting references were also made as to rents of shops and houses in those times, also to hours of labour, prices of provisions, and wages, all these being extremely low, the wages of the journeyman mason being recorded as ninepence sterling per week. The lecture, which was listened to with great attention, was highly appreciated.—Midlothian Journal.

ROME.

THOSE who wish to pay a winter visit to Rome will find the most up-to-date guide to be the seventeenth edition of 'Walks in Rome,' by A. J. C. Hare and St. Clair Baddeley, lately published by Kegan Paul. The writer of this notice used the thirteenth edition of Mr. Hare's work on his first visit to the capital of Italy, and perhaps no guide is better calculated to interest a novice in the city of the all-conquering Republic, of the Emperors, and of the Popes, crammed as it is with well-selected extracts from secular and sacred historians, archæologists, and novelists, introducing him to many books which he will afterwards read for himself. When it was in two thick crown octavo volumes in large type, other guide-books used to advise their purchasers to 'read it at Piale's,' but when it became two thin volumes, in small type, they recommended it only to 'those who preferred entertainment to accuracy,' and now that it has become one volume on good thin paper and fuller of reading matter than ever, perhaps they will not name it at all.

Mr. Hare's extracts from German and Greek works and some of those from Latin and Italian are given in English; but quotations from French works are untranslated. We hope that in the next edition Mr. Baddeley will indicate what chapters in the French works the extracts are taken from, as many of his readers will have Zola's 'Rome' or de Staël's 'Corinne' in English. He might add an index of authors quoted from, on the blank page and a half which follow index to the present book. The only omission we have noticed in the index is that of '178' against 'Dea Matuta.' Earlier editions of these 'Walks' had no pictures, and only a small-scale map of Rome, drawn, we think, by an American. This edition has a larger map of Rome, by Bartholomew, three good pictures of the Niger-Lapis and the monuments under it, a clear plan of the Palatine, and the large plan of the Forum and Sacred Way which appeared in Mr. Baddeley's account of Comm. Boni's excavations. In that account Mr. Baddeley failed to note Boni's discovery concerning the Column of Phocas. He gives all detail about the column here, except its height. We were told, in Rome, that that column was taken from the round temple of Dea Matuta, the columns of which are thirty-two feet high (p. 178). Mr Baddeley has re-written much of the chapter on the Palatine, and more of that on the Forum. Most of the quotations from Ampère's French History of the Roman Empire are left out, and very many interesting and informing extracts from more recent works are inserted. Thirty pages on Tivoli, Frascati, Tusculum, Albano, and Nemi are added at the end of the book. There are small corrections on perhaps most of the pages. On p. 17 the Arch of Drusus is left out of the account of St. Paul's coming and going, because the present misnamed arch is proved to be later than Paul's time; but the 'basaltic lioness' still stands in the story of the stabbing of Rienzi. If Mr. Baddeley did not wish to spoil Mr. Hare's 'purple patch' he might have added a footnote, 'but see pages 82 and 85.' In the account of the Borgian apartments, Pinturicchio's picture of Giulia Farnese is mistaken for that of her predecessor on the Papal pillow, Vanozza Catanei, who, when Pinturicchio painted in Rome, was old enough to have been mother to 'la Bella.' As a rule the very latest discoveries are noted, but more might have been said about the probable early date of the mosaics in S. Maria Maggiore (p. 391). The marble ship (p. 234) has, perhaps since this book was printed, been found to be the original 'votive offering' and not a mediæval copy. As it is near the site of the quarters of provincial soldiers making a temporary stay in Rome, perhaps the centurion saved from shipwreck while bringing Paul to appeal to Cæsar had it first set up.

'The Spirit of Rome: Leaves from a Diary by Vernon Lee' (John Lane). Miss Violet Paget, whose well-known pen-name is attached to many interesting works on Italy, lived in Rome from the age of twelve to that of seventeen, and then left it for many years. This work records her impressions jotted down during visits to the city in the spring of 1895, 1897, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, the winter of 1904, and the spring of 1905. The jottings are printed as first written, not 'worked up,' and may be compared to a collection of impressionist sketches of drawings and studies for pictures and of little Rembrandtesque etchings. On reading p. 34 we seem to see a long gallery all in shadow except one striking red-haired face with a high light on it. Some will be impatient with the book, but to us it is very interesting. It sometimes pays so much more attention to that which is fleeting (like light and shadow and foliage and feelings) than to solid walls, whether whole or in ruins, that the reader may find it hard to recognise a scene familiar to him. Who that visited the villa of Hadrian, when the trees were almost leafless and the sun shone from a different point, will recognise the beautiful description, on pp. 59 &c., of what seemed to him an interminable succession of shapeless walls. The writer has again and again walked round and driven round the remains of the Theatre of Marcellus, has looked up at the Mediæval Palace on the top of it, and longed to penetrate its portals, and lo! Vernon Lee lived in it in the spring of 1900 and visited other lodgers there in a later year. Shades of the Pierleoni and the Savelli and the Orsini, will you not haunt your ancient corridors now that the fortress from which you defied Popes and potentates and dominated the rest of the Romans has become a modern lodging-house? If Miss Paget will print her next edition on thinner paper and have smaller and fewer blank spaces between her chapters, some people will like to carry her book with them to read her descriptions where they were written. The spirit of much of the book is expressed in brief in the chapter on Villa Madama, which closes with the words: 'Rome is an organic city, almost a living being; its genus loci no allegory, but its own real self.'

'Rome and Pompeii,' by Gaston Boissier (T. Fisher Unwin). Boissier, an eminent French writer, published this work in Paris in 1880. This translation, by D. Havelock Fisher, was first printed in 1896 at 7*s*. 6*d*., and is now re-issued without alteration, therefore it contains no account of recent discoveries, but it is so well translated, so interesting, and so calculated to give a clear idea of life in the classical days of Rome that it would be wise to pay the very small sum at which it is now published and read it through before visiting that city. There are eight plans, some of them very useful ones. The plan of the Forum is on the same scale as Mr. Baddeley's in Hare's 'Walks,' and it is interesting to compare the two and note the changes made owing to the results of recent excavations. Unfortunately the book has no index.

IN AID OF THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

ON Thursday evening, December 14, the West Kent Amateur Comedy Company gave an excellent dramatic entertainment in aid of the funds of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, at which the heads of several of the leading houses were present, and the trade generally was well represented.

The entertainment opened with Pinero's curtain-raiser 'Hester's Mystery,' the scene of which is laid in the dairy and stable-yard of Nance Butterworth's farm. Mr. H. Collier was very good in the part of Joel, a farm labourer, whose one topic of conversation was 'a pint o' y'ale' that he was 'set on,' while Mr. J. Farries Moss was the very personification of a sleek butter-won't-melt-in-my-mouth clerical pedagogue, the Rev. Owen Silverdale, who comes to visit Mrs. Butterworth's daughter. The other three characters in the piece were well played, though one wished that John Royle, the husband of Hester Butterworth, who had come to the farm disguised as a stable hand, had been a little more ardent in his affection towards his wife when he is able to throw off his disguise.

'The Upper Crust' is a study in the efforts of the proprietor of Doublechick's Diaphanous Soap, Mr. Barnaby Doublechick, to obtain a footing in Society (spelt with a big S). The well born but penniless Lord Hesketh, played by Mr. Stanley Morris, undertakes to introduce him into select circles on the payment of a good round sum. Sir Robert Boobleton (Mr. J. Farries Moss), a horse-loving and empty-headed young baronet, makes love to Doublechick's daughter, but is luckily cut out by the timely arrival of an old lover, supposed to be a penniless orphan, but who eventually turns out to be Lord Hesketh's son, with the result that everything ends happily. Barnaby Doublechick (Mr. Ronald Harris) caused a great deal of amusement by his absurd mistakes in similes and quotations, though perhaps Sir Robert Boobleton was the character who contributed most to the success of the piece by the spirited way in which he threw himself into his part.

Besides being treated to an excellent evening's entertainment, one had the satisfaction of feeling that it was benefiting the B.P.I., which is worthy of all the support it can get. We believe nearly £40 was netted for the fund.

Among the firms and individuals who were present or represented were Messrs. Smith, Elder, Longmans, Murray, Macmillan, Chapman & Hall, George Bell & Sons, Copland, Dean, W. & R. Chambers, Lippincott, Warne, Russell Smith, Hugh Rees, T. Fisher Unwin, R. B. Marston, Stevens & Haynes, J. C. Francis, Stoneham, Putnam, Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Sotheran & Co, J. Shaylor, the Oxford University Warehouse, Reeves & Turner, Houlston, Quaritch, Rimell, Karslake, Hodgson, Sotheby, Puttick & Simpson, Mr. Leighton, Mr. E. Parsons, Mr. F. Parsons, Mr. Tregaskis, Mr. H. Stevens, and many others whose names we did not get. Everybody's thanks are specially due to Mr. Geo. Seymour Snowden of Messrs. Sotheby's who organised the affair, and to the other gentlemen who took part in the arrangements. A great many ladies were present, and, as far as we have heard, everyone was much pleased.

Messrs. Downing of Birmingham, Messrs. Young & Sons of Liverpool, and Mr. Hopkins of Glasgow also supported the affair by taking tickets.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

DEAR SIR,—The Committee of Management desire to give notice that the Books and Accounts of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution will be made up for the year 1905 on Thursday, December 28, and that annual subscribers who fail to renew their subscriptions before that date will be excluded from the Register of Benefit Members for the year 1905.—I am, dear Sir, your faithful servant, W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

CLASSIFIED CATALOGUES.

DEAR SIR,—We are mentioned this week in a paragraph of your very useful journal, the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, by a librarian who at the same time makes a suggestion to other librarians. We thought it might interest you to know that we, in the list inclosed, have for some months been doing what has now occurred to your correspondent. If it should prove useful we shall probably extend and improve it. On page 31 in the monthly surplus list novels are arranged under the authors' names—that is, a selection of some of the better-known writers.—I am dear Sir, your obedient servant,

HENRY G. PARSONS.

For Mudie's Library,
30 & 34 New Oxford Street.

[A classified catalogue is best in most ways, but the difficulty is to classify—books have often most misleading titles.—ED.]

A CORRECTION.

DEAR SIR,—We would like to thank you for the notice of our volume 'Nonconformity in the Nineteenth Century,' by C. Silvester Horne, M.A., which appeared in your last issue; unfortunately, however, you have the volume as published by Mr. Daniel, whereas it is published by us. Will you be so good as to insert a line in your next issue correcting this mistake?—Yours faithfully,

ARTHUR E. WATSON,
Manager, Publication Department,
National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In reply to several correspondents: Yes, it was a pure slip to call Sir Henry 'Mr.' Campbell-Bannerman—it has become difficult to think of the Prime Minister as anything but 'Mr.' Of course no disrespect to Sir Henry was intended or thought of.

W., ABERDEEN.—The reason that your and other 'Wanted' advertisements are often too late is that you will not observe the very simple rule printed at foot of every 'Books Wanted' page.

CORRECTION.—In our issue of November 25, on p. 611, for Mr. R. Blatchford read Rev. Frank Ballard in notice of Haeckel's 'Monism.'

Notices of Books

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Essays of Michel de Montaigne (Cotton's Translation),' revised by W. C. Hazlitt. Three vols. Subscribers to Messrs. Bell's handy, well-printed 'York Library' will heartily welcome this addition to the series, and a more suitable selection could scarcely have been made. In addition to the work of revision, Mr. W. C. Hazlitt has supplied a short biographical notice of the author and many useful footnotes.

From the Caxton Publishing Company, 84 Chancery Lane, W.C.—'Monograms and Ciphers,' designed and drawn by A. A. Turbayne and other members of the Carlton Studio. This work has now reached the fourth of the seven divisions in which it is to be completed, and in respect of its originality of design, dexterity of craftsmanship, and careful production, it continues to merit the high praise we bestowed on previous issues.

From the Church Missionary Society.—'In Salisbury Square,' by Irene H. Barnes, with preface by the Right Hon. Sir John H. Kennaway, Bart., C.B., M.P. This is a history of the house in Salisbury Square, the centre from which the beneficent enterprises of the Church Missionary Society are directed and its internal economy regulated. The various chapters deal with 'The House Itself,' 'The Power House,' 'The Portrait Gallery,' 'The Recruiting Office,' 'The Foreign Office,' 'The Treasury,' 'The Publishing House,' and so forth. The volume which testifies very forcibly in an indirect manner to the enormous good work performed by this powerful religious organisation, is illustrated with photographs taken by the members of the Kennaway Photographic Society.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'Peter and Alexis: an Historical Novel,' by Dmitri Merejkowski. This is decidedly not everybody's fiction; but for those who can ponder while they read, and are quick to detect a deeper significance in a writer's description of social life than the mere desire to entertain, the book will appeal with irresistible force. The story, to quote the words of the preface, is a simple and earnest psychological study of the most moving episode in the life of the greatest of the Romanoff princes. It is a sketch, vivid and true, of classes and conditions, of court and society, of peasants and wild religious beliefs in Russia at the beginning of the eighteenth century. At the present time it should, for obvious reasons, be exceptionally interesting.

From Mr. Henry Frowde.—'Poems and Extracts chosen by William Wordsworth for an Album presented to Lady Mary Lowther, Christmas 1819.' Though in many ways this volume is interesting—as a means, for instance, of studying Wordsworth's critical faculty and the canons of Art that guided his judgment—it will probably be on account of the numerous poems by the Countess of Winchilsea that the book will chiefly attract attention. The volume, which is printed literally from the original album with facsimiles, consists of ninety-two pages, thirty-two of which are devoted to the Winchilsea extracts, the remainder being occupied by poems of various other writers, including Wither, Cowper, Thomson, Pope, Mickle, Shakespeare, Akenside, Waller, Beaumont, and Marvell. Mr. Harrold Littledale has edited the book, and Mr. John Rogers Rees, to whom he is so greatly indebted for allowing him to rifle the treasure from the valuable Wordsworth collection in the library at Sarum, has contributed a short preface.

From the Funk & Wagnalls Company.—'The Preparation of Manuscripts for the Printer: containing Directions to Authors as to the Manner of Preparing Copy and Correcting Proofs, with Suggestions on the Submitting of Manuscripts for Publication,' by Frank H. Vizetelly. Mr. Vizetelly enters very thoroughly into the details of printing work, so far as concerns the author and the preparation of his manuscripts, the correction of proofs, &c.; and his explanations and suggestions will undoubtedly prove of much service to the novice. But, after all, it is only actual experience that can afford substantial information to the tiro, and there are ways of conveying directions to the printers other than Mr. Vizetelly's rather elaborate instructions.

From Mr. Andrew Melrose.—'Men of the Covenant: the Story of the Scottish Church in the Years of the Persecution,' by Andrew Smellie, M.A. Within a period of two years this work has passed through no less than four editions, a fact which amply testifies to its interest and usefulness. The publication of the present cheap edition should extend its circulation even still further.

From Mr. Eveleigh Nash.—'The Nunnery Wall: a Romance in Six Parts,' by Elizabeth Holland (Lady Owen). The character of this novel is of the simple, ingenuous order, but it is certainly not without interest. The story opens in a French convent school, and we learn of the doings and immature love episodes of two pupils, Marie de Hauteville and Héloïse von Kessler, the academic fêtes, and so forth. Anon the narrative becomes broader in its current, but it never quite carries the spectator away, and the delicate 'tone' at which the authoress so obviously aims is scarcely sufficient recompense for want of moving incident. Still, we have little doubt there are many who will be interested in Lady Owen's romance. Fiction has to cope with a variety of tastes.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.—'Proverbs in Porcelain: to which is added "Au Revoir," a Dramatic Vignette,' by Austin Dobson. The 'Proverbs' of this extremely dainty, prettily bound volume are reprinted from 'Old World Idylls,' and were first published in 1877 in a collection of miscellaneous verse. 'Au Revoir' comes from a later volume, 'At the Sign of the Lyre.' In the present production they have the advantage of some charming illustrations by Bernard Partridge.

From the same.—'The Sonnets of Michelangelo Buonarroti,' translated into English verse by S. Elizabeth Hall, to which is prefixed 'A Life of Michelangelo Buonarroti,' translated by the same from the Italian of Ascanio Condivi. To a large number of readers, no doubt, Condivi's 'Life' of the great artist will be the chief attraction of this volume. With the sonnets they may already be familiar. It is a fine, straightforward piece of work, which impresses by its simplicity and obvious sincerity of purpose, and apparently it has lost nothing in its transmission through Miss Hall's hands.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'British East Africa: Past, Present, and Future,' by Lord Hindlip, F.R.G.S., F.Z.S. If somewhat wanting in literary force, Lord Hindlip's volume evinces an acquaintance with the trend of East African life and politics, so far as concerns the British settler, that renders his testimony of considerable interest. The first two chapters are mainly devoted to a defence of Sir Charles Eliot's attitude over the Masai question, and from this the author proceeds to a consideration of the administration of the colony, the hut tax and labour supply, the nature of the country, its advantages for settlers, and other aspects of his subject.

From the same.—'The Scandinavian Question,' by William Barnes Steveni. The conclusions at which the author of this volume has arrived are rather disquieting. He believes that the partition of Sweden and Norway is fraught with the gravest consequences to this country, and that when the psychological moment arrives Russia will annex Finmark and Germany Denmark, seeing that Russia requires open-water ports, and Germany more seaboard and sailors for her growing navy. Mr. Steveni has had exceptional opportunities of studying the Scandinavian question, and his views are bound to be listened to with the utmost respect.

From Mr. Philip Wellby.—'The Mastery of Death,' by A. Osborne Eaves. The author propounds many interesting theories in regard to an increased duration of life in this volume, and shows the habits which, in his opinion, conduce to this effect. His views are enunciated under such headings as 'Why People Grow Old,' 'The Philosophy of Fasting,' 'The Perfect Diet,' 'Cleanliness: Internal and External,' 'Economic Nutrition,' 'The Source of Life,' and 'Body Building.' Though he can scarcely expect the majority of readers to agree with him, undoubtedly they will find in his essays much that is worthy of serious reflection.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—'Life and Matter: a Criticism of Prof. Haeckel's "Riddle of the Universe,"' by Sir Oliver Lodge. Professor Haeckel's attitude, according to the author of this volume, is that of a scientific man who has strayed into the field of philosophy, and has there conducted himself as if in a region free from scientific trammels—'a region where confident assertions might be freely made, where speculative hypothesis might rank as theory, and where verification was both unnecessary and impossible.' It is with the object of correcting the injurious influences likely to be exercised by portions of Professor Haeckel's interesting and well-known work that the Birmingham scientist now takes up his pen, though he is careful to point out that his treatise is to be regarded less as a hostile attack than as a supplement—'an extension of the more scientific portions of Haeckel's work into higher and more fruitful regions of inquiry.' The volume consists of ten chapters, treating, amongst other subjects, of 'Monism,' 'The Law of Substance,' 'The Development of Life,' 'Religion and Philosophy,' 'Mind and Matter,' 'Professor Haeckel's Conjectural Philosophy,' 'Hypothesis and Analogies concerning Life,' and 'Will and Guidance.'

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

In the book world, no less than in other phases of our complex modern life, it is frequently a satisfaction to witness 'the survival of the fittest' in the scheme of evolution. When the same reference books and works of counsel and advice are bought up by ensuing generations of readers to the tune of some million copies, it is pretty clear that 'the fittest' has really 'survived' all competition. Such a volume is 'Mrs. Beeton's Household Management,' of which nearly a million copies have been sold. Here is a work which several generations of good housewives have declared indispensable to the well ordering of a home. The new edition now issued has been revised throughout and brought completely into touch with modern requirements by experts of special authority. It contains 2,300 pages (about 600 more than the last edition), including hundreds of new photographic illustrations and many new coloured plates.

THE BEST GIFT BOOKS.

THE SAUCIEST BOY IN THE SERVICE. 5s.
By GORDON STABLES, R.N.

THE ABERDEEN JOURNAL says: 'The name of Dr. Gordon Stables on the title-page will be enough to decide many a boy who is allowed to choose his own Christmas book. The Doctor's new yarn is a "ripper," and no mistake.'

THE VINLAND CHAMPIONS. 5s.
By OTTILIE A. LILJENCRANTZ.

THE BRITISH WEEKLY says: 'Boys will revel in "The Vinland Champions," a tale about the Vikings; exciting up to the end.'

THE WHITE-ROOF TREE. 3s. 6d.
By ETHEL TURNER.

THE LEICESTER POST says: 'It is a charming picture of young life, painted as the authoress knows how to depict it. She has a fresh and tender touch indeed, which has singled her out as the happy successor of Miss Alcott, and won for her the golden opinions of her juvenile readers. Her charming new story cannot but multiply her young friends, and enable them to pass many more delightful hours under the witchery of her spell.'

THE STORY OF THE GRAVELYS. 3s. 6d.
By MARSHALL SAUNDERS.

FOR MURIEL'S SAKE. 3s. 6d.
By L. E. JACKSON.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS says: 'A thoroughly healthy and interesting story, with some charming glimpses of boyhood and girlhood, which young and old alike will read with avidity.'

ANDY. 3s. 6d.
By LUCILE LOVELL.

THE KEIGHLEY CHRONICLE says: 'One's mind goes back of the stories of Little Lord Fauntleroy to find a parallel to the same charm and grace as that with which Miss Lovell narrates the doings of "Andy."'

THE CHILDREN WON'T BE HAPPY TILL THEY GET IT.

The Booksellers' Provident Institution

FOUNDED 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A YOUNG MAN or WOMAN of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the advantages enumerated below, which are secured by an invested capital of £30,000.

FIRST.—Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND.—Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD.—Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH.—A Cottage in the Country (Abbotts Langley, Hertfordshire), for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH.—A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbotts Langley for the use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH.—A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH.—All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children. At the present time there are about sixty persons participating in these benefits, two-thirds of whom are Widows of Booksellers Assistants.

EIGHTH.—The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

During the year 1901 grants amounting to £1,226 were paid to sixty-four recipients, giving an average of more than £19 each.

For further information and for details of the various rates of payment ranging from 8*s.* 6*d.* per quarter, at the age of 18, to the lump sum of £68. 5*s.* at the age of 50, apply to the Secretary,

THE JANUARY . .

NUMBER OF . . .

THE BOOK MONTHLY

AN ILLUSTRATED RECORD, GUIDE AND MAGAZINE FOR BOOKSELLERS, LIBRARIANS & PUBLISHERS FOR BOOKBUYERS, READERS & WRITERS

If you are concerned with Books—above all, if you are a Bookseller—you could not do better than begin the year by becoming a subscriber to the BOOK MONTHLY; that is to say, if you do not already take it in. You can easily decide if this is good advice by getting the January number, which is typical of the qualities and usefulness of the magazine.

For example, it gives pages of paragraphs about the New Books which will appear in January—despite the General Election. This information is really essential to the Bookseller or the Librarian who wants to 'keep up with the times,' as the old phrase has it. Then, scarcely less valuable, is the full, carefully classified list of the December new books and new editions which the January BOOK MONTHLY contains.

The number is especially strong in its articles, not to speak of its fresh, literary gossip and its many attractive illustrations. There is an interview with Mr. Hall Caine on the Art of the Novelist-Dramatist, a subject which arises from the success, this winter, of his play, 'The Prodigal Son,' at Drury Lane Theatre. Again, there is an informed article on a matter which demands national attention—the buying out of the country, chiefly by American millionaires, of so many of our literary treasures. Other special articles treat of the Art of Dickens; of that organisation which we call the 'Wholesale Book Trade,' and how it works; and of the new Cabinet as a 'Cabinet of Letters.'

But there is no need to say more of the January BOOK MONTHLY, which is published, 6d. net, by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO., 4 Stationers' Hall Court, London.

NOTICE.

The Publishers' Circular is published every Saturday and can be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith & Sons' Railway Bookstalls and of the principal newsagents in London and the Provinces.

Communications relating to the Literary Department, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to the Editor of The Publishers' Circular, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.

The Editor will be glad to receive Notes of Changes and of other matters interesting to the Trade generally.

Correspondents are requested to write on one side of the paper only, and give their real names and addresses, not necessarily as signatures to their letters, but as a guarantee of good faith. Unless this rule be adhered to, no notice will be taken of such communications.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The Publishers' Circular can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

TIMES BOOK CLUB.

A Retrospect.

Some of the dust of the fray has now settled down, and it is possible to discern the present state of the battle and to count the dead and wounded. Is the casualty list a very heavy one? We think we may safely say that so far it is not. The dust and din have been tremendous, but there has been more fear than actual slaughter so far.

On November 18 we made a comparison of the promises of the Times Book Club and of the facts, and showed that the actual advantages offered were not nearly so large or so revolutionary as the 'spread eagle' prospectuses and announcements seemed to promise.

The number of false rumours which have been circulated, and, we fear, regarded as facts, has been very large. Time has exploded a good many of these fictions, and will in due course dispose of a good many more.

As regards the Times Book Club, although it has been closely watched by many lynx eyes, it has not sold any new net book under the published price so far as we are aware.

It has given, and expressed its intention of abiding by, a definition of secondhand books which is more conservative than that apparently adopted by many of the older lending libraries, and we wish that all lending libraries could see their way to accept and abide by this definition. Such an understanding would be very beneficial to authors and the Trade generally.

It has, for the time at any rate, withdrawn its large and much vaunted catalogue, and is carrying on a business similar to that of the other lending libraries.

It has not been able to supply all the newest books immediately, and there are many cases of subscribers having been kept waiting.

The prices quoted in its secondhand lists are certainly not lower than those quoted by other libraries.

The advertisements in the Times have certainly sent some purchasers to the ordinary booksellers to buy their books.

The promises contained in the original prospectuses and advertisements were unquestionably misleading—although not intentionally so—but a label has now been attached to the booklet asking the public to read the whole, and not merely a part of it. Those who take the trouble to do this will find that the promises, read all together, bear a more chastened aspect than most of them taken singly. Indeed, the Times has achieved a very remarkable feat, as it may be said of its preliminary promise that many of the parts are greater than the whole.

On the other hand, there has appeared in the columns of a contemporary a series of articles severely criticising the Times Book Club, parts of which are calculated to do more harm than the Times Book Club prospectus could do. These articles are clever in themselves, but based on insufficient data and sometimes on wild rumour and half-truths. In short, they are entirely misleading, and have, we fear, caused some of the booksellers to adopt an attitude and a policy which, in the end, are likely to do them more harm than good.

Some booksellers are now informing the public that they give, and always have given, more advantages to the public than the Times Book Club gives—a curious volte-face.

The Trade will no doubt show its good sense by discounting the cries of the extremists on both sides, by watching events, and by guiding its policy so as best to serve the interests of the public; for he who serves the public best will fare best in the long run.

And so, at the opening of the New Year, we wish prosperity to the Book Trade, and hope that before many months have passed the lion of the Times will be found lying down with the bibliopolic lamb, and jointly with him helping to increase the circulation of books in amicable rivalry.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have made arrangements with Lord Curzon for the publication, early in the New Year, under the title 'Lord Curzon in India,' of a selection from the speeches delivered in India and at home during the period of his Viceroyalty. The speeches will be grouped according to subjects, and will, in effect, constitute a handbook to Indian politics, more complete, more accurate, and more authoritative than any work that is in existence. For in the speeches are explained the theory and objects of British rule in India, the character of the administration, the nature of the problems that confront the Government, and the manner in which they are being solved. A full introduction dealing with Lord Curzon's administration, and providing a nexus to the speeches and a synopsis of the present condition of India under British rule, will be contributed by Sir Thomas Raleigh, who served for five years under Lord Curzon as Legal Member of Council. To facilitate reference to any subject an exhaustive index will be provided.

In the January number of the Cornhill Magazine begins a new serial story by Mr. Stanley J. Weyman, the scene of which is laid in England at the time of the great Reform Bill, and in which the Bristol riots form a principal episode. Lord Brougham, Sir Charles Wetherell, and other prominent politicians on both sides, make their entry in the pages of the opening instalment.

The imminence of a General Election will have the effect of postponing the publication of some books, but with regard to Mr. Winston Churchill's work on the life and career of Lord Randolph Churchill, Messrs. Macmillan & Co. announce that it will appear on Tuesday, January 2, instead of Friday, January 5, as previously announced.

Some people, like Lord Roberts, cannot abide cats, and Captain Foster, one of the characters in Mr. W. L. Alden's new book, 'Cat Tales' (Digby, Long), says, 'Speaking of cats, I'm free to say that I don't like 'em.' But there is no doubt that the house cat and the office cat are favourites with the majority of mankind; and in this work Mr. Alden introduces in a delightful way to quite a catalogue of cats, including the cigar cat, the improved cat, the yellow terror, and half a dozen others. All who like cats will like Mr. Alden's work—he is evidently a student of cat life.

The General Election will doubtless cause a demand for special books. One of the first will be that by R. G. Webster, entitled 'Elections: Electors and Elected; Stories of Elections Past and Present,' to be published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. It will deal with matters relating to elections in a bright and interesting manner, and the author will give not only his own manifold experiences during twenty years of active political life (during thirteen of which he sat in Parliament) but those of others. It is promised that the book will contain many useful hints for the successful conduct of an election, interspersed with amusing incidents at political contests, most of which will be original and will be told for the first time. Mr. Webster is author of the latest book on Japan, and his new volume will be ready early in January.

The January number of the Reliquary will contain articles on 'Recent Researches in Connection with Roman Remains in Scotland,' 'The Silver Altar of Pistoia Cathedral,' 'Ye Antiente Hospitall of Ye Holye Trynitie, Croydon,' and 'The Sculptured Caves of East Wemyss: III. The Factor's Cave.'

Mr. Robert Brown, of Barton-on-Humber, is writing a history of his native town. The first volume, which covers the history from Roman times to 1154, will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock very shortly, entitled 'Earlier History of the Town of Barton-on-Humber.' The work will be published in quarto size and will be embellished with numerous illustrations of the locality, and by maps, plans, and facsimiles.

The world is growing old, according to the hymn, and it is not growing better—if some pessimists are right—but, fortunately, 'Whitaker's Almanack' improves each year, and it is much the best epitome of the history of the present state of the world which exists. Those who are satisfied with the state of British trade and agriculture should compare Whitaker of 1876 with Whitaker of 1906; they will see that although we have advanced, as compared with our own record, we have lost ground in a most disquieting way as compared with the advances of Germany and the United States.

The 'Harmsworth Self-Educator' deserves its great success.

Messrs. G. Vanoest & Cie., 16 Rue du Musée, Bruxelles, say: 'Herewith we have pleasure in announcing to you the publication of our latest novelty, "L'Ecole Belge de Peinture, 1830–1905." This book will be ready in January. [A copy for notice in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR will be sent as soon as ready. For the moment we send you our prospectus, which will give you an idea what this book will be. It will be profusely illustrated with heliogravures, and of a rather moderate price. On account of the coming exhibition of Belgian painting in the Guildhall this book should have much success in England. A little note announcing it would much oblige.'

In his preface to his new work, 'Mary, Queen of Scots: her Environment and Tragedy,' the author, Mr. T. F. Henderson, says: 'The aim of the present biography is to deal with the more personal aspects of the Marian period and to deal with them apart from ecclesiastical prepossession and in the understanding that the praise and blame of the twentieth century are not quite applicable to the sixteenth. Indeed, the more the present writer has concerned himself with the career of Mary Stuart the more he has been impressed with the unapplicability to it, in the strict sense of praise or blame. Whatever may be the rights or wrongs of Protestantism or Catholicism, Mary appears to have been very largely the mere victim of a bitter religious quarrel.' There are more than a hundred portraits and other illustrations in the work.

Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish early next year a volume of 'Letters of Madame de Staël to Benjamin Constant,' which has been edited by the Baroness Nolde, a descendant of Madame de Staël, and the possessor of these letters, which have been handed down through the family.

We understand that Mr. Baker, of Newman Street, is about to re-issue his edition of the 'Works of St. John of the Cross' (by Lewins). The first volume, containing 'The Ascent of Mount Carmel,' is in the press, and will be prefaced by an Essay on 'Carmelite Mysticism' from the pen of V. R. Prior Zimmermann, O.D.C., of Wincanton.

Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have in preparation a 'Manuscript' Edition of 'The Complete Writings of Henry David Thoreau,' handsomely illustrated with 100 photogravures from nature. The edition will consist of 20 volumes, limited to 600 signed and numbered sets, each containing a page of original manuscript. The last 14 volumes will contain 'Thoreau's Journal,' edited by Bradford Torrey, the larger proportion of which is material that has never before been published. The illustrations are from photographs by Herbert W. Gleason, who has made a careful study of Thoreau's writings, and has explored with equal thoroughness the woods and fields about Thoreau's home.

THE BOOK TRADE REFORM MOVEMENT IN 1905.

THE year now drawing to a close has been an unusually satisfactory one so far as the adherence to the reform movement is concerned. While the chief antagonist has not ceased from troubling, the technical decision in his favour this summer has been of but little advantage to him, and his next move is still to be made. In the meantime, the case of Charles Scribner's Sons against Macy's to secure protection for their copyright books is on the calendar, and hopes are entertained of a favourable decision.

The retail trade has been almost a unit in its adherence to the rule, the defections coming from little known, and, as a rule, unimportant persons who enter the ranks of the trade in many instances as mere catspaws for the underseller. While some dissatisfaction is privately expressed by a few at the attitude of the American Publishers' Association in certain matters, even these dissenting booksellers are agreed that the reform movement has been of decided benefit to the trade, and that a reversion to the old conditions would be a calamity that must be resisted with every means available. Indeed, so strong has this feeling become among retail booksellers that it would be to the decided disadvantage of either a publisher or a bookseller to attempt to weaken their present defence against senseless and ruinous underselling.

It is no doubt true, as some claim, that a bookseller is placed in an equivocal position when he is expected to retail a $1.50 work of fiction at $1.08, instead of being enabled to sell it at a straight bona-fide price, no matter what that price may be. There is even a strong feeling on the subject among the members of the American Publishers' Association; but the majority of the publishers of fiction do not yet see their way clear to yield on this point, and therefore the minority has had so far to content itself with the compromise by which, under the present conditions, the bookseller is nevertheless assured of at least $1.08 on new fiction, instead of being obliged, as he was a few years ago, to meet his competitors in the larger cities, who were selling fiction, as bait, in many cases as low as seventy-nine cents. As to the more important lines carried on by the bookseller, there can be no question that the protection secured by the American Publishers' Association has been of enormous advantage.

Considering the deplorable condition in which the book trade found itself scarcely five years ago, harassed on one hand by reckless competitors and on the other hand by indifferent publishers, the associations formed since that time have done creditable work. Indeed, it is less to be wondered at that some difficult points still remain to be settled, than that so much has already been accomplished. Where so many interests in a country of so vast an extent as ours must be considered, reform must ever work slowly, and its prosecution and defence for some years to come will be expensive. The moral and material support of everyone interested in the progress and uplifting of the movement is therefore absolutely necessary. Neither the publisher nor the bookseller can afford to return to the old conditions. The disaster that overtook even some of our larger publishing houses was due in some measure to the disorganisation of the channels of distribution. As for those few booksellers who, while looking and hoping for still better things, are unwilling to put their shoulders to the wheel and help to obtain them, we put to them the simple question, Would you care to go back to the old conditions?—New York Publishers' Weekly.

DEATH OF MR. THOMAS HARVEY SMITH.

We regret having to record the death of Mr. Thomas Harvey Smith, for many years a familiar figure in the book trade. Born in the early thirties, Mr. Smith was educated at the City of London School, and, after serving an apprenticeship with Messrs. Leaf, he entered the service of Messrs. Wm. Tegg, the then well-known publishers of Cheapside, he having married the daughter of Mr. Wm. Marshall, one of the partners.

In 1868 he resigned in order to join the late Mr. T. J. Allman, founder of the well-known firm of Allman & Son, Ltd., of New Oxford Street, with whom he was connected for thirty-eight years, and was a member of the board of directors at the time of his death, which took place on the 18th inst., at the age of seventy-two, at his residence, 39 Regina Road, Tollington Park, after a painful illness of over two months.

The late Mr. Smith had a keen memory for men and manners connected with the trade of fifty years ago, and nothing delighted him more than to recall to interested and attentive listeners his recollections of how business was done in the old days at Messrs. Tegg's. He was associated with many familiar names in what one might term the back-waters of the book and publishing trades—names like that of the late Mr. Richard Taylor, Charles Collins, Frederick Rymer, and many others who were well known and respected in their day and generation.

Mr. Smith was interred at New Southgate.

Mention the 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the Publishers' Circular will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

MR. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW PREMISES.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, whose business has outgrown the capacity of his office in Paternoster Square, is removing, on the first day of the New Year, to new offices at No. 1 Adelphi Terrace, a few steps south of the western Strand. Adelphi Terrace is known to architects and antiquarians as one of the most interesting works of the brothers Adam. It has had many residents of note—among them David Garrick, Topham Beauclerk the wit and his artist wife, 'Lady Di.' Lord Beaconsfield is said by some to have been born in one of its houses. No. 1, the future house of Mr. Unwin's business, was, in the second quarter of the nineteenth century, the residence of Sir Edward Banks, the builder of Waterloo, Southwark, and London Bridges. About twenty years ago it was occupied by the Arundel Club. We envy Mr. Fisher Unwin the fine view he will have of the Thames. Mr. William Black used to say the view from the Terrace was the finest in London. We wish him all success in his new premises.

STEP BY STEP.

The best blotting-paper we have ever used is the 'Corona Civica.' The makers, Messrs. Huber Brothers, 179 Tottenham Court Road, claim for it, and we think with justice, that its advantages over other blotting-papers are:

Enormous power of absorption.
As difficult to tear as parchment.
Does not crumble.
Greater durability.
Cheap.
Cannot be wasted.
One sheet outlasts several sheets of any other make.

STEP BY STEP.

They wrote on stone, and did not want blotting-paper.

They wrote on papyrus, and let it dry.

They wrote on parchment, and dried the writing with pounce.

They wrote on paper, and dried the writing with sand.

They wrote on paper, and dried the writing with fragile and pulpy blotting-papers.

Now they write on paper, and dry with 'Corona Civica,' the world's best blotting paper.

A GREAT NATURALIST.

'My Life: a Record of Events and Opinions,' by Alfred Russel Wallace. (London: Chapman & Hall, Ltd.) Everyone will be glad that the Nestor of the evolutionist camp has been able himself to tell us the story of his life. It has been a long life of over fourscore years, full of work, rich in achievements, starred with high ideals, and the story of it must have been pleasant to write as it is pleasant to read. It has been many-sided to a greater degree than that of most scientific investigators, for Alfred Russel Wallace has always had more than professional irons in the fire, and has always been as much interested in practising biology as in theorising about it.—Nature.

MR. CHARLES GARVICE'S NOVELS.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., as publishers for Mr. Charles Garvice, have been requested by him to inform all booksellers and librarians, and others connected with the bookselling trade, that, it having come to Mr. Garvice's notice that some person or persons is, or are, importing American editions of his novels into England and offering them for sale, he desires it to be understood that the copyright of every one of his novels is protected in this country in accordance with the International Copyright Act, and that he has instructed his solicitors to take legal proceedings against any person or persons offering such American editions of his novels for sale in England.

'WHITAKER' AND 'WHO'S WHO?' FOR 1906.

The most indispensable of all the annual reference volumes are undoubtedly 'Whitaker's Almanack' and 'Who's Who?' and the new issues are both better than their own best previous records. The latter now contains over 20,000 biographies, and every biography has been submitted for personal revision.

The only improvement we have ever sighed for in 'Whitaker' is a large-type index, and if, instead of fourteen, it occupied forty pages its value would be greatly increased. A good readable index is the only thing which could give an adequate idea of the immense variety and importance of the contents. It would pay to cut down some other items if necessary, because at present it takes too long to find a thing in the index by reason of the terribly small type, especially in the dull-weather months.

TRADE NOTES AND CHANGES.

We understand that Mr. Verrinder, who was so well known as the Librarian of the Grosvenor Gallery in New Bond Street, finally severs his connection with the library at the close of the present year.

Messrs. Hirschfeld Brothers, Ltd., have purchased the old-established and well-known business carried on since 1860 by Mr. A. Stenhouse, 40 & 42 University Avenue, Glasgow, which they will carry on, under the same name and their own management.

Mr. Edgar Greenwood, who has been associated for some years with Messrs. Scott, Greenwood & Co., is now a partner, and the firm will from January 1 be known as Scott, Greenwood & Son.

Mr. E. C. Bird has now left 6 & 7 High Street (The Ivy House), Tring, and has removed to Fairfield, Tring, where all communications for him should be sent. The business, taken over by Messrs. G. T. De Fraine & Co. in January 1905, will shortly be removed to new premises in another part of High Street.

For all Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals send your subscriptions to Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's Buildings, London (established 1809). Catalogue gratis.

'THE CAVALRY JOURNAL.'

We learn from the Times that there will be published in January the first number of a new quarterly publication, called the Cavalry Journal, which is intended for the circulation of information concerning cavalry matters in the British and other armies, and to bring the various branches of our mounted troops, both at home and in the Colonies, into closer touch with each other by encouraging the development and interchange of ideas. The journal will be illustrated and will deal with sport as well as military matters. The cost of a single number will be 2*s.* 6*d.*, and the annual subscription 10*s.* The journal will be edited from the Royal United Service Institution and published under the direction of Maj.-Gen. R. S. S. Baden-Powell, C.B., Inspector of Cavalry in Great Britain. The following is a list of the officers connected with the journal: Editor, Col. Hon. O. Lumley, late 11th Hussars; sporting editor, Lieut.-Col. J. W. Yardley, late 6th Dragoons; managing editor, Lieut.-Colonel A. Leetham, late 13th Hussars (by permission of the council of the Royal United Service Institution, of which institution Col. Leetham is secretary). Col. R. B. Colvin, C.B., Essex Imperial Yeomanry, will be sub-editor in charge of matters connected with the Imperial Yeomanry, and sub-editors have been appointed in the Colonies as follows: Australia, Maj.-Gen. H. Finn, Inspector-General, Melbourne; Canada, Lieut.-Col. Victor Williams, Royal Canadian Dragoons; Egypt, Capt. G. Gillson, R.A.; India, Lieut. P. Howell, Queen's Own Corps of Guides (Intelligence Branch); New Zealand, Col. Bauchop, C.M.G.; South Africa, Lieut.-Col. H. G. H. Kennard, 5th Dragoon Guards. It is understood that the expenses in connection with the production of this journal are guaranteed by cavalry officers at home stations.

PERMANENT OFFICE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF PUBLISHERS.

Statements concerning the Work done by the Permanent Office in the Course of the Fourth Year (July 1, 1904—June 30, 1905).

The Executive Committee of the Congress met at Berne, on November 9, 1905, with Mr. A. Brockhaus in the chair; Messrs. Fouret and Bruylant were present, as well as Mr. T. Ricordi as President of the Milan Congress. Messrs. Brunetière and Murray sent apologies for non-attendance.

The Committee examined the Report of Management and approved it. The questions treated in that report, which are of a kind likely to interest Publishers' Associations, appear in these statements as well as the decisions taken by the Committee.

Wishes which may be considered as Advice.

The Bureau drew up a list of a certain number of resolutions which are disposed of, but which the Committee thought fit to have printed for the use of those national Associations who would like to pass them on to interested parties. That list, accompanied by a letter, was sent on November 22 to the said Associations with request to have it published.

Berne Convention.

Holland, Roumania, and Egypt.—Efforts are continued to obtain the adhesion of those three countries to the Convention. A movement in favour of Roumania joining it seems to result from the Government having sent a delegate to the International Congress at Liège (1905).

Questions of Interest to the Publishing and Book Trade.

Professional Schools.—The report on that question, concerning which the Bureau in the course of the year made renewed inquiries of the Associations, will shortly be printed. A school for the Book Trade has been founded at Stockholm, and the professional classes at Berlin and Vienna have been considerably developed.

Maintenance of the Published Price.—The Report of the Bureau has been submitted to every Association for the part concerning its country, and this work will be continued by the Bureau until the results can be published.

National Biographies.

The Bureau will on this question prepare a statement, which will appear in the General Report of the Bureau for the Congress of Milan.

Exchange of Documents between Publishers' Syndicates &c.

On February 15, the Bureau sent a circular to the Associations suggesting an exchange of documents and the creating of professional libraries. The Bureau asked besides if they would send it their documents, about twenty copies of each, so that the exchange between the Associations might be proceeded with. Most of the Associations have responded to that appeal, and already, at the commencement of the fifth year, the Bureau began to distribute the documents; it has also written again to those Associations who have not yet sent anything.

The Book and the Postal Service.

A letter will be sent to the Postal Congress at Rome in 1906, on the subject of two of the wishes of the Congress, the realisation of which may be hoped for in the international domain. That letter contains the following proposals—(1) besides the rate of 25 c. for registration of printed matter giving a right to an indemnity of 50 fr. in the event of the loss of the consignment, to establish also a new category, where the rate would be reduced to 10 c. and the responsibility of the Post Office to 20 fr.; (2) to abolish the rate of 25 c. on payment of printed matter collected through the post. The letter was signed by the Executive Committee, and will be sent to the Postal Congress, when it is about to meet.

Successful Action of the English Publishers' Association.

The Bureau was also called upon to direct its attention towards the sending to Italy of bound printed matter written in another language than Italian. This was done in consequence of complaints made by the Publishers' Association in London. By decision of the Italian Government the maximum weight of bound printed matter destined to be sent to Italy was reduced to 400 gr. Now, most English books weigh more than that. The matter was discussed with the Italian Association and the maximum weight raised to 500 gr. The English publishers did not think that sufficient, and, after further discussions, they succeeded in having the weight provisionally raised to 1,000 gr. whilst looking forward to the 2,000 gr. provided by the Postal Union.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Congress at Milan. (June 6 to 10, 1906.)

The Bureau has sent to the Managing Committee of the next Congress a list of the Associations existing at present, and they have been summoned to the Congress. Mr. T. Ricordi, president of the Managing Committee, has given full information about the preparation and organisation of the fifth Congress, which, it is expected, will be largely attended. A special committee has been founded at Leipzig, grouping Austrian, German, and Swiss publishers; about 160 among them have in principle decided to go to Milan.

The International Commission will meet twice during the Milan Congress—once at the opening, the other time at the close. The first meeting will be attended by the present delegates (of whom a list was sent to the papers on September 26, 1904); the second will be composed of the delegates the Associations will appoint during the Congress for the following period. The Associations will be asked to commission the new delegates to take, among other matters, the engagements for the expenses of the Bureau after the Milan Congress.

New Ideas of Form and 'Get Up.' Code of Usages between Author and Publisher.

Delivery on Sale or Return.—In response to inquiries addressed by the Bureau to the Associations with regard to these subjects, the Austro-Hungarian Association sent in April 1904 the desired particulars concerning their own country. The Bureau will submit the result of these inquiries to the Congress at Milan.

Publishers' Contracts. — In November 1904, the Bureau asked the Associations to send it copies of real publishers' contracts (books, music, art) of their countries. Most of them complied with that request, and the Bureau has written again to those who have not yet done so. The Bureau will have all the contracts received printed in French, followed by the German, English, and Italian originals, as well as the principal legislative provisions for publishers' contracts.

Protection of Music.

England and Piracies of Copyright Music.—A Bill destined to provide new means for putting a stop to infringements of English musical copyright was presented to the House of Commons by the Government, but it has been left in suspense after the second reading.

Mechanical Musical Instruments. — On that question there will probably be made a report for the Milan Congress.

Technical Vocabulary.

It might be useful for publishers and booksellers to compile a vocabulary of technical and professional terms and expressions occurring in the publishing and book trade in the four languages, English, French, German, and Italian. That plan has been put before the Committee, who has taken it up. In compiling the work, there will be taken as basis the technical and professional terms found in the records of the previous sessions of the Congress, and in any other documents in the possession of the Bureau.

Alongside of the work the details of which have now been enumerated, the Bureau was often called upon to give information on questions relative to the publishing and book trade, authors' and publishers' rights, postal and Custom House matters, &c. On that subject the Bureau would remind the Associations and their members that it is entirely at their disposal whenever they want to ask for any information.

LITERARY LINKS WITH A LONG PAST.

It is no wonder that Thackeray, the greatest novelist of the age, laid many of his scenes in the midst of surroundings so attractive, a welcome guest himself at Bath House, where all the literary men would assemble to do homage to Lady Ashburton, who, Carlyle said, was 'the greatest lady of rank I ever saw, with the soul of a princess and captainess, had there been any career possible for her but that of a fashionable one;' where Carlyle and Froude, Tennyson and Browning, and Thackeray's great friend, Brookfield, the preacher at St. John's Chapel (already destroyed by the omnivorous builder)—Brookfield, who, as Lord Stanley of Alderley said, quoted Milton and Shakespeare and described the devil as a perfect gentleman; and where the salon of the Miss Berrys in Curzon Street made glad the heart of Thackeray, who says: 'A very few years since I knew familiarly a lady who had been asked in marriage by Horace Walpole, who had been patted on the head by George I. This lady had knocked at Dr. Johnson's door; had been intimate with Fox, the beautiful Georgiana of Devonshire, and that brilliant Whig society of the reign of George III.; had known the Duchess of Queensberry, the patroness of Gay and Prior, the admired young beauty of the Court of Queen Anne.' —From Mayfair and Thackeray in the Cornhill Magazine for January.

The vicinity of Cambridge affords several pleasing reminiscences of great American men of letters. Here are situated the homes of Longfellow and J. R. Lowell, and not far distant is the very beautiful and extensive cemetery of Mount Auburn, where may be seen the graves not only of the two authors just mentioned, but also those of Motley, Prescott, Parkman, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Agassiz, and others, recalling not only much that is best in the literature of America, but at the same time the noble characters of several of her noblest sons.

From Boston and its many interesting literary and historical connections, we travelled to Albany, the handsome capital of the State of New York. From thence we returned to New York City on one of the splendid steamers which navigate for upwards of one hundred and fifty miles the great river that bears the name of one of the most famous English discoverers in North America—Henry Hudson. While it is unnecessary to comment on the scenic interest and beauty of this grand river, it is permissible to mention that from the steamer a glimpse is caught below Tarrytown, of Sunnyside, for many years the home of Washington Irving.

Leaving New York for the second time, we travelled to Philadelphia, the famous 'Quaker City,' founded in 1682 by the great William Penn, a statue of whom, in heroic size, stands high above the city on the central tower of the Municipal Buildings. But we must not loiter here even to record a visit paid to one of the most interesting buildings in the United States—the old Hall in which, in 1776, the signing of the famous 'Declaration of Independence' took place.

At Washington the greatest feature of literary interest is the Library of Congress, some account of which I propose to give later. Beyond that, the Government Bureau of Engraving and Printing, said to be the largest establishment of this kind in the world, well repays a visit, as does also the famous Smithsonian Institution, founded in 1848 by an Englishman, the reports emanating from which—often admirable and always bulky—are well known to booksellers in this country. The beauty of the city of Washington, with its handsome avenues radiating from the Capitol, its open and well-planted spaces, its fine houses, its splendid Government buildings and public institutions, not to mention the magnificent Capitol, which, finely situated on high ground, compels the admiration of all travellers, has been so often described as to render further comment here out of place.

From Washington to Chicago—a distance of over 900 miles—an opportunity is afforded of testing the long distance 'railroad service,' of the excellency of which so much is spoken in America. Certainly this particular journey entirely upholds that excellence. To step into the train at Washington at ten minutes to five in the afternoon, to partake of an admirably served dinner, to sleep (more or less comfortably) during the night hours, to wake up and breakfast at eight o'clock and to shortly find oneself on the Chicago platform at 8.54—one minute before scheduled time!—is indeed a splendid performance in railway travelling. Needless to say, the train—a limited édition de luxe, so to speak—is a very fine one, including dining, smoking and observation cars, as well as such luxuries as writing tables, a miniature library, and a barber's shop. Having regard to the distance and the necessary stops made during the night, it is needless to point out that a very high rate of speed is maintained throughout the eighteen hours' run. Chicago is not a 'bookish city,' though there are those who hold—and with good reason—that it does not deserve all the hard things that have been said of its materialistic and money-making tendencies. In any case it is unquestionably a great city, the extraordinarily rapid growth of which is probably no adequate measure of its future greatness. Certainly it is not backward in respect of its public libraries and kindred institutions—of the former there are no less than seven of importance, the Chicago Public Library (to which I hope to refer in another article) being remarkable both in respect of its building and equipment.

The journeys from Chicago to Cleveland —the home of the enterprising publishing firm of Messrs. Burrows Bros.—from Cleveland by steamer on the great Lake Erie to Buffalo, and from the latter city to Niagara, do not offer any features of particular interest to the readers of this journal. Nor is it necessary again to give expression to those feelings of awe, of wonder, and of admiration which so persistently grow upon all those who have witnessed the world-renowned Falls of Niagara. Indeed, it may almost be said that at this point the fascination of gazing at this magnificent and tremendous fall of water —its aspect varying as much with each hour as with each change in the weather—and the hardly less wonderful spectacle of the Whirlpool and the Rapids, drove all thoughts of books and libraries from one's mind. True, at Toronto, to which we crossed by steamer from Lewiston on Niagara River, a few days were spent endeavouring (among other things) to learn something of the position and possibilities of the booksellers' trade in Canada. But once embarked at Toronto for the journey to Montreal down some 380 miles of the great St. Lawrence River, and all ideas of books and bookselling are again banished from one's thoughts, by the unrivalled and constantly changing beauties of the Thousand Islands, or by the mild excitement of 'shooting the rapids.' At Montreal, exigencies of time and other reasons prevented any visits of literary interest, though at Ottawa we enjoyed a brief inspection of the small but admirably arranged library in the Parliament Buildings. Re-embarking at Montreal we proceeded another 180 miles down the St. Lawrence River to Quebec, a city as picturesque and quaint in its situation and character as it is interesting in its historical associations. At Quebec we finally embarked on board the new turbine Allan liner 'Virginian,' whence, passing down the lower course of the St Lawrence and out into the North Atlantic through the Straits of Belle Isle, we were conveyed, comfortably and speedily, to our starting-point at Liverpool.

BUYERS AT BOOKSTALLS.

How they will fare under the New Scheme.

(From the Morning Leader, December 28.)

All the essential details of the transfer of the railway bookstalls on the North-Western and Great Western lines from Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son to Messrs. Wyman & Co., the new contractors, are now complete.

Next Monday morning the revolution will have been quietly accomplished, and, beyond the appearance of new faces behind the stalls, there will be little to denote that anything unusual has happened.

As is generally known by now, Messrs. Wyman, in co-operation with the railway companies, intend enlarging the scope of the stalls in certain important particulars, but it is improbable that any very drastic changes will take place immediately, as the policy of the new contractors is not yet fully decided upon. An official statement is to be forwarded to the Press between now and the end of the week.

Station-master's New Duties.

One important new departure which Messrs. Wyman have in contemplation is the employment of the station-masters at those smaller stations where no bookstalls exist as newsagents. Every morning, by this scheme, a parcel of newspapers will be despatched to these stations, and the station-master will undertake the sale of them.

The statement that the new stalls will sell tobacco and tea, and perhaps the lighter kind of fancy goods, has no official authority, but in well-informed quarters it is reported to be the fact.

Messrs. Smith & Son's New Scheme.

Meanwhile, Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son are looking forward to the change with unruffled cheerfulness. With few exceptions, in every town from which the firm's railway bookstalls are being evicted, there will be opened on Monday next a brand-new Smith bookshop, to which the railway-stall business will be transferred.

Practically the entire staff of the present stalls are continuing their services at the new shops; and, in response to circulars from Messrs. Smith & Son, nearly all the old library and newspaper customers—some 80,000 in all—have replied, intimating their intention to continue their custom.

New Departures.

These new shops will allow Messrs. Smith & Son to extend their business also. They do not intend selling tobacco or tea, but they will go in largely for fancy goods of the silver and leather ware variety.

Of course, the advertisement contracting business, which was an important adjunct of the railway-stalls, will have to go, although there are many contracts that still have a year or so to run; but with more space and freedom of scope than at the station platforms they look forward (so a managing official at the Strand head office told a Morning Leader representative yesterday) to accomplishing a big expansion in the number of newspaper readers.

'We regard our employees as much cleverer book and paper sellers than the ordinary newsagents,' said this gentleman. 'We shall push our books and papers as they are nowhere pushed by existing bookshops; so what with an entirely new firm on the railway-stalls and our own competition in the towns there is going to be a much bigger sale of newspapers in the New Year than ever before.'

SALE JOTTINGS.

Messrs. Hodgson & Co. offered for sale last week a collection of books from the library of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, the disposal of which had been rendered necessary owing to exigencies of space. The selection was consequently made with a view to disposing of such books as were of no practical utility to the cadets, and that this was readily to be accomplished may be inferred from the fact that one set alone, an old French Encyclopædia, extended to 199 volumes quarto. The principal prices realised were as follows: 'Historical Records of the British Army,' an almost complete set, 68 vols., £44 10*s.* (Robson); 'Royal Astronomical Society's Memoirs,' first 33 vols., 1822 &c., £18 (Quaritch); 'Journal Polytechnique,' first 22 vols., 1795-1862, £11 15*s.* (Sotheran); 'Encyclopédie Méthodique,' 199 vols., calf, £7 (Wesley); 'Newtoni Opera,' 5 vols., 1779-85, £4 15*s.* (Hermann); D'Alembert's 'Opuscules Mathématiques,' 8 vols., £5 7*s.* 6*d.* (Sotheran); 'Recueil des Historiens des Gaules et de la France,' 20 vols., £8 15*s.* (Quaritch); Master of the Rolls' Publications, 40 vols., folio, £18 15*s.* 6*d.*; 'Archæologia,' 1779-1873, £8 15*s.* (Quaritch); Molière, 'Œuvres,' 6 vols., 4to., 1734, £7 10*s.* (Hill & Son); Rousseau, 'Œuvres,' 17 vols., 4to., 1782, £7 5*s.* (G. H. Brown); Lyly's 'Sixe Court Comedies,' 12mo., 1632, £8 15*s.* (Parsons); Sir William Davenant's Works, 1673, £4 2*s.* (Edwards); Sir J. Smythe's 'Discourses of Divers Sorts of Weapons,' 1590, £5; Sir Roger Williams's 'Briefe Discourse of Warre,' 1590, £4; Clayton's 'Order of Martiall Discipline,' 1591, £7 10*s.*; and Markham's 'Souldier's Grammar,' 1639, £6 10*s.* It is extremely satisfactory to know that the four very important volumes of manuscript of Extracts of Orders, Returns, and Capitulations relating to the American War of Independence, comprised in lot 193, were 'bought in' on behalf of the War Office and have since been deposited in the library in Pall Mall. It may be added that the whereabouts of these volumes—the importance of which can hardly be over-estimated—had for many years been entirely unknown, and their discovery was solely due to the careful cataloguing of the auctioneers.

Letters to the Editor

[We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.]

AN ARBITRATION QUESTION.

Sir,—Mr. Edward Baker, 14 John Bright Street, Birmingham, has agreed to submit the following matter to your kind arbitration.

On August 4 last I sent him a copy of 'Combe's Phrenology' instead of Spurzheim's work, a mistake which, of course, I cannot justify. He wrote remonstrating with me for the mistake.

The book, however, was not returned, and I naturally concluded that some other customer had purchased it. I was therefore surprised when on December 2 the book was returned.

I at once returned it, stating that it was no longer returnable, from the time (four months) it had been kept. I think I was right in so acting, as I had no opportunity of selling so long as the work remained in his possession. The matter, however, is for you to decide. Trusting to your kindness to insert this in the Publishers' Circular,

I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

John Campbell.

[Mr. Campbell, it seems to us, ought not to object to take the book back. He made a mistake in sending it, and another in not at once asking for its return, instead of assuming that Mr. Baker had sold it. Mr. Baker may have forgotten all about the book, but if that was the case it was Mr. Campbell's fault in not sending a post-card to say that if the book was not returned at once it must be paid for. —Ed.]

WORK AND MAINTENANCE BILL, 1906.

Sir,—We trust you will kindly allow us to correct a typographical error in the argument prefixed to the draft of the above-mentioned Bill. The average profit realised by the railway companies in respect of each employee is nearly £100 yearly, instead of £10 as printed.—I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,

Edward Christie,
Secretary of the Maintenance and Employment Society.

THE MISSING BOOKSELLER FOUND.

Dear Sir,—It is only my constant occupation in the search for my missing son, Mr. David Murray, which has prevented me acknowledging sooner your kindness in inserting notices in your valuable journal.

Many of your readers will be glad to hear that I found my son last Saturday, working at Warner Place, Hackney, in the Church Army Firewood Depôt. It is one of those curious cases of loss of memory which have occurred so frequently of late. How he got to London is a complete mystery; but he appears, when there, to have found himself among the 'submerged tenth,' and to have proceeded to get a livelihood in the same way as so many thousands of that great army of unfortunates have to—viz. by selling small articles in the street, or by working at Salvation Army or Church Army Depôts. Sometimes he was unable to earn enough for a night's lodging, and spent the night in the streets, getting free soup at the Salvation Army Soup Kitchen at Wych Street, Strand, where 1,000 hungry and homeless waifs are fed nightly. His memory of everything in his life previous to November 21 (the date of his disappearance) is completely blotted out, and consequently he has no knowledge of wife, child, parents, friends, places, incidents, or anything; but he has a perfect knowledge of all his life in London, and is in fairly good physical health, considering the privations he has undergone. He is now under medical care, and it is hoped his memory may return in the same sudden way it appears to have gone. Great credit is due to the Salvation Army for their splendid work. Their Investigation Department is conducted on the most scientific principles, and their kindness and courtesy is unbounded. The Church Army is also doing a great work. If it were not for these two great and beneficent agencies, there would be little chance of a lost one being found, while many would perish from want and exposure.

In conclusion, I should like to thank many of your readers for their ready help and sympathy during a time of great trial.—Yours faithfully, Frank Murray.

Moray House, Derby:
December 26, 1905.

[Very glad, indeed, to learn that Mr. Murray found his son, but surely such a case cannot be of 'frequent occurrence.' We are glad to bear testimony to the great work of the Salvation Army and also of the Church Army.—Ed.]

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Bride of a Day,' by R. B. and Dorothea Townshend. Since the days of our youth, when Gustave Aimard and Captain Mayne Reid by their thrilling stories awakened our interest in Mexican life and character, it has seldom fallen to our lot to reach such a dramatic romance as the one now before us. The main incidents are concerned with racial distinctions among those passionate and courageous representatives of an old order slowly disappearing. Jim Penberthy, ranchman and miner, has married a beautiful Navajo Indian girl, and a captive in a Mexican household, but on the wedding-day the young wife is stolen by members of her native tribe and taken back to her parents. The American husband follows in hot pursuit of his bride, and the various episodes connected with his adventurous guest are related by the authors in true romantic style.

From Messrs. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'The Gentle Golfer,' by Dr. Macnamara, M.P., illustrated by Arthur Moreland. Just the book to wile away half an hour in the club smoke-room while waiting for one's partner, or after lunch. Good fooling and funny sketches, drawn from life possibly, will appeal to most of those who have succumbed to the fascination of the game, except perhaps the Scot.

From Messrs. David Bryce & Son, Glasgow.—'Llewellyn, and other Poems,' by Alfred Sassoon. The principal poem in this brightly bound volume is founded upon an heroic Welsh legend, and it has many passages of much descriptive power. The author, we are told, resides in Calcutta, and the subject, in a measure, is àpropos of the Prince of Wales's present visit to India.

From the Caxton Press, Ltd., 15 Furnival Street, E.C.—'The Purloined Prince,' by Edgar Turner and Reginald Hodder. Two clever authors, masters of ingenious device, have combined their wits to very effective purpose in this novel. We are introduced in the first place to a gaming resort on the Mediterranean not difficult to recognise as Monte Carlo, and here we witness the utter despoilment of two young men. Reduced to complete beggary, they propose to commit suicide, but are rescued at the crucial moment by the Director of the Casino, who has a most daring scheme to propose to them. This is nothing less than to abduct the Prince of 'Montaro,' who has refused to grant Monsieur Le Brun a further concession of the Casino premises unless at an enormous advance. Deprived of his liberty, it is thought that he will be amenable to reason, and eventually concede Monsieur le Directeur's just demands. Upon such a promising foundation as this, it may readily be conceived, a most attractive fabric may be erected, and—to carry out the simile—each room is full of the most thrilling surprises. The book is illustrated, but something of the value of Mr. Albert Morrow's designs is lost by the indifference of the binder, who has persistently inserted them at the wrong page.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Almond of Loretto; being the Life and a Selection of the Letters of Hely Hutchinson Almond, M.A.,' by Robert Jameson Mackenzie, M.A. It has been with a great deal of interest that we have perused this biography of a Scottish schoolmaster of the nineteenth century, written with friendly fervour. The record of the labours and struggles of forty years in his chosen vocation prove him to have been a man of indefatigable industry. His biographer tells us 'he was indeed the most versatile of men, and with other antecedents and better opportunities might have made fame.' His striking personality even pervades his correspondence, which comprehends a variety of subjects. The volume contains a good portrait of Almond.

From the same.—'The Green Shay,' by George S. Wasson. The varied aspects of life in a New England harbour town are depicted by the author with singular realism in this well and compactly told novel. Obed Fairway, the retired shipwright, Captain Jasper Sheave, and most of the seafaring folk frequenting Kentle's Harbour, are characters replete with life; while in their conversations a conscious fidelity is shown by the novelist for spinning a yarn that will be appreciated by English readers.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Napoleon's Notes on English History made on the Eve of the French Revolution, illustrated from Contemporary Historians and refreshed from the findings of later research,' by Henry F. Hall, F.R.Hist.S. In this book we have the privilege of knowing the great Emperor and military genius as an eminent literary character. Napoleon was acknowledged to be an omnivorous reader, and in the compilation of his notes on the leading events in our history he was indebted in no small measure to such voluminous writers as John Barrow, Thomas Carte, Paul de Rapin-Thoyras, and David Hume. The late gifted editor of the volume before us (of whom Mr. Dent has written a prefatory In Memoriam)—had in his introductory chapter written with much enthusiasm of Napoleon's views on history, and as we followed the notes seriatim until the close of the book we have been cognisant of the mental grasp evinced by the Emperor in dealing with the careers of the various occupants of the English throne. The volume is quite unique in its character, and is well worthy the attention of historical students, also of those desirous of viewing Britain's past through the eyes of a judicious and impartial critic. A frontispiece portrait of the historian Paul de Rapin adorns the book, which also contains illustrations and maps.

From the same.—'In the Track of the Moors,' by Sibyl Fitzgerald. This is one of the most sumptuous books of travel we have seen, packed full of coloured illustrations, many of great beauty, and all catching thoroughly the spirit of the countries illustrated. The author takes us through Spain and the neighbouring countries of Morocco and Algeria, and gives us her impressions on the countries, peoples, and buildings. We do not mean that this is the mere gossip of an idle traveller; her remarks are well considered and charmingly related, while the conclusions at which she arrives, both as regards people and architecture, are thoughtful and correct. We cannot help referring again to the beautiful illustrations and general get-up of the volume.

From Mr. Henry Frowde.—'Catherine Grace Loch: a Memoir,' edited by Surgeon-General Bradshaw, with an Introduction by Field-Marshal Lord Roberts. The English Government seems to have a perfect genius for obtaining servants of brilliant intellectual and organising powers and then proceeding to break their hearts by over-work, red tape, and obstruction. The record of Miss Loch's life is a case in point. Sent out to India in 1888 as superintendent of a little band of nursing sisters destined to found a Nursing Service there, she from the first displayed unusual powers of insight and grasp of detail, as well as an unfailing devotion to her work. The difficulties she had to encounter were innumerable—the immense distance over which the nurses were scattered, the novel conditions of climate and environment, the jealousy of the lower medical officers, the orders and counter-orders of 'the little Tin Gods,' and, above all, the miserable system of untrained hospital orderlies, drawn at random from any regiment, and constantly swept away to be replaced by more raw material—these were only a few of the trials to be surmounted.

This memoir of Miss Loch, which is almost entirely autobiographical, is a pathetic story of continuous struggle for efficiency in the face of most adverse conditions. It is due to her exertions that the Indian Military Nursing Service is established upon a firm basis; but it is heartbreaking to think that her valuable life was shortened by overwork and over-strain which should never have occurred. After many years' strenuous labour, Miss Loch, whose nursing career began at Bart's, was invalided home in 1902 and died two years later. The record of her work is one to move all hearts.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd.—'Oswald Bastable and Others,' by E. Nesbit. Those who have read 'The Treasure-Seekers,' by the same author, will meet some old friends in this book, and will thoroughly enjoy their further adventures. The stories have a charm and quaint humour about them which make them very attractive, and there is something of the method of Lewis Carroll in them. The volume is well illustrated by Charles E. Brock and H. R. Millar, and should certainly be among the Christmas presents for the boys and girls.

From the same.—'The Old Oak Chest,' illustrated by F. M. Rudland. For quite young children who have not yet mastered the longer words of the language, nothing could be better than this little work, printed in large clear type, and very prettily illustrated in colours.

From Messrs. Greening & Co. Ltd.—'The Fulfilment,' by Edith Allonby. We learn from the Introduction to this highly imaginative contribution to fiction that the deceased authoress held the position of head mistress in various provincial girl schools, and while so occupied composed the book before us. Under the guise of Deborah, the introspective heroine of the story, the authoress formulates pronounced views on many things regarding the present and the hereafter. The tragical ending of her promising career will doubtless heighten the interest of this final allegorical romance from her pen.

From the same.—'Pauline Merrill,' by Agnese Laurie-Walker. Here we have a great deal of cheap, and sometimes laughable, talk about religion; a lot of love, with a rather tiresome heroine; and, we half suspect, a purpose, since an Indian, the chief of the Oneidas, woos and wins a pale-face. This Indian element may lift the book out of the commonplace, but there is no particular interest in the story, and, so far as the mixed marriage is concerned, the book is not convincing.

From the same.—'Wildcat: a Tale,' by Ina Wye. The character of Esther Garnet, the self-sacrificing heroine of this story of modern life, is well depicted by the authoress. Her repeated efforts in helping her brother Humphrey out of the difficulties arising from his innate gambling tendencies merited a far better fate than marriage to Wildman, the jealous reprobate, once Esther's benevolent friend, but who subsequently proved himself unworthy of such a resourceful woman. The novel is one that can be commended with confidence.

From Messrs. William Holmes & Co., Ltd., 9 Mitchell Lane, Glasgow.—'The Newsagents', Booksellers', and Stationers' Diary for 1906.' This, prepared from a thorough knowledge of the requirements of the trades referred to, is a very useful production likely to be widely appreciated.

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack.—'Our Island Story,' by H. E. Marshall, with pictures by A. S. Forrest. We have nothing but praise for this first-rate child's history of England. It is a clear and excellent story, and the youngsters are not likely to think that it is a lesson-book in disguise. The author has been wise not to omit the many legends which have entwined themselves with the facts in our history and which have become inseparable from it. There are many coloured illustrations which add greatly to the charm of the book, to which we cannot do better at this season than call all parents' special attention.

From Messrs. Keith & Co., 43 George Street, Edinburgh.—'Manual of the Church Question in Scotland: being a Handbook to the Churches (Scotland) Act, 1905, together with the Report of the Royal Commission, 1905, and Appendices containing Lists of Properties, Funds, Agencies of both Churches, and of the Churches in dispute, with other items of 'Information,' edited by Hew Morrison, J.P., LL.D. The valuable character of the information imparted in this volume may be gathered from the extended title. As an able guide to a due comprehension of the matters in dispute between the Free and the United Free Church in Scotland, more especially in regard to congregational funds and properties, we may especially recommend Dr. Morrison's work; but there are other respects in which it is equally to be commended. The report of the Royal Commission, for instance, presents a very valuable item which, in conjunction with the Act in handy form, should be welcomed by all who desire to have information of the kind here given in concise terms.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Face of Juliet, by L. T. Meade. The authoress takes for the theme of her novel the experiences of Catherine and Juliet, twin sisters, who had been separated from birth and were reunited after the lapse of twenty years. The former passed her girlhood with Squire Endicott, her stepfather, while Juliet lived with her aunt, whom she accompanied on her travels. On the death of that relative Juliet goes home, and from thence the main interest of the story develops. The tale is told by this experienced writer with a directness and simplicity that will be appreciated by the reader.

From the same.—'The Life Elysian: being More Leaves from the Autobiograpyh of a Soul in Paradise, recorded for the Author, by Robert James Lees.' The former books by this writer led us to infer that the nature of the future life would be the paramount theme of the present volume to which our attention is chiefly directed. The tendency to probe the secrets of the 'unknown country that divides us from the voices and faces of our desires and dreams' has at all times an inherent fascination for many minds, and hence it is not surprising to find that such books manifestly obtain the approval of sympathetic and even thoughtful readers.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'New Collected Rhymes,' by Andrew Lang. This new book will indisputably add to the poetic reputation of one of the most refined poets of the present day. In the manly and tender 'Loyal Lyrics' that form the early portion of the volume Mr. Lang sings with Highland fervour of 'types of things dear that do not die'; while the lighter and more modern themes of song which follow are spontaneous compositions rendered by the poet in graceful verse.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Recollections,' by William O'Brien, M.P., Mr. O'Brien's readers are not likely to be limited to those who are in political sympathy with him. It is true that he sometimes startles us with his championship of individuals whose fame in England is not an enviable one, as, for instance, in the case of Captain Mackey, who met his death in attempting to blow up London Bridge with dynamite; but it is never amiss to hear both sides of a question, and it is not to be supposed that in the generations of quarrelling between England and Ireland the former has always been right and the latter invariably wrong. Naturally, this book is chiefly political, and is most interesting from this point of view, since the author was behind the scenes in the stormy years from 1870 onwards; but there are many good stories and personal reminiscences besides which help to make up a very attractive volume.

From Mr. Elkin Mathews.—'Shadow and Gleam,' by Lilian Street. This little volume of sonnets and lyrics betokens in the authoress the possession of a genuine gift of lyrical expression. Want of space, however, prevents us from making adequate quotation therefrom.

From the same.—'An Hour of Reverie,' by F. P. Sturm; 'Sea Danger and other Poems,' by R. G. Keatinge; and 'Shadows,' by Elizabeth Gibson. The present period in literature is made noteworthy for the number of its capable poets. Among them must be ranked the authors of these three tastefully produced booklets, for in all of them there is evidence of pronounced metrical skill. From the same publisher we have received 'Poems in Prose,' from Charles Baudelaire, translated by Arthur Symons. The book will prove an appropriate introduction to the writings of the gifted French littérateur.

From Mr. Andrew Melrose.—The Girl's Book of Health,' by Walter N. Edwards, F.C.S. This book contains much practical and helpful advice on an all-important subject, which the author aptly says is 'the greatest earthly good one can enjoy.' Such wise counsel as he imparts is concisely given in his pages.

From the same.—'A Heart's Harmony,' by Ethel M. Forbes. This unpromising title aroused in us a prejudice which it was not easy to overcome. Miss Forbes has put a great deal of careful and conscientious work into her story, but she has met with only partial success. Realising what she has intended her characters to be, we can appreciate her failure to make them alive and vivid; Hester is not well drawn, and her father is something of a prig—though Miss Forbes will not think so. In a book so lacking in incident, the weakness of characterisation is a serious fault; but we must remember that 'A Heart's Harmony' is a first work, and as such it has considerable promise.

From Alexander Moring, Ltd.—'The Children of Shakespere,' by Amy Payton Wright. There is a natural charm about this new contribution to Shakespeariana, whilst the delineation of character contained in it will attract the attention of young students and readers of Shakespeare generally.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Battle of Wavre and Grouchy's Retreat: a Study of an Obscure Part of the Waterloo Campaign,' by W. Hyde Kelly, R.E. The author of this volume is to be congratulated in placing before military students and others a most interesting record of the stubbornly contested battle fought on June 18, 1815, between Lieutenant-General Thielmann, of the Third Prussian Corps, and Marshal Count Grouchy. From the author's graphic pages we are also led to recognise the importance the battle itself assumed as a deterrent effect on the skilfully conceived plans of the great Napoleon, as the subsequent catastrophe sufficiently proved. The extreme care which Mr. Kelly has bestowed upon his narration, likewise in the arrangement of the details preceding the battle, merit our approbation. This historical monograph contains some good maps of the various positions occupied by the contending armies.

From the same.—'Poultry Farming: Some Facts and Some Conclusions,' by 'Home Counties.' The aim of the writer of this helpful treatise on a popular industry has been to provide his reader with information and 'a sounder knowledge of what may be called the basic facts of poultry keeping.' In the sixteen chapters he deals with manifold matters appertaining to 'Profitable Poultry Keeping,' 'Poultry Farming Made Easy,' 'Management of Farm Poultry,' 'Hatching and Rearing,' and 'Table Poultry Production,' all of which subjects have been carefully studied from the recorded results of English, American, and Continental methods and practices. The book abounds in practical hints and valuable suggestions for the novice as well as the enthusiastic 'poultry farmer,' and it is also illustrated throughout.

From the same.—'The Legend of Fair Helen as told by Homer, Goethe, and Others: a Study,' by Eugene Oswald, M.A. Helen, 'the peerless dame of Greece,' has been the eternal theme of poets and dramatists from Homer to Tennyson, while her beauty has inspired artists and sculptors of all ages and climes. Yet, notwithstanding this adoration, grave doubts have arisen regarding her personality otherwise than as the heroine of Greek legendary lore. The writer of this book has spared no pains in gathering such evidence as may be found in the pages of Greek and other ancient historians relative to this fascinating controversy. His intimate knowledge of the subject, moreover, has induced him to extend the various accounts of fair Helen, the beloved of Paris, the handsome Trojan prince, 'as she appeared to generation after generation.' The volume, which will be found both helpful and instructive by lovers of the Homeric story, has for frontispiece a reproduction in photogravure of Dante G. Rossetti's picture of Helen of Troy.

From Mr. Eveleigh Nash.—'Outcasts of the East,' by Florence M. Bailey. The colour and the picturesqueness of Calcutta slum-life are to be found in Miss Bailey's strong and moving story; also the filth of mind and body and the craftiness of spirit of most of the lower-class Eurasians. Theresa D'Cruz, the child of shameful parentage, is a figure drawn with insight and knowledge; the clash of her temperament with those of her kinsfolk and neighbours is the theme of the story, and we do not give Miss Bailey an undue measure of praise when we say that her novel is among the very best dealing with native life in India that have appeared during recent years.

From Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 'Sir Raoul,' by James M. Ludlow. The plot of Sir Raoul and the romance of the Lady Renée are based upon the historical facts concerning the miscarriage of that crusade of the thirteenth century which was diverted from conquering the Moslems to the capture of the Christian city of Constantinople. Dr. Ludlow's imaginative power is very great; he has the seeing eye and the understanding heart. Though his romance is full of detail, yet the central theme is always emphasised, and it stands out in a vivid and arresting manner. The love story that runs through the whole gives a picture of a woman one is not likely to forget for many a long day. We shall be greatly surprised if the work does not obtain immediate recognition.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Royal and Loyal,' by the Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, B.D. This little book of thoughts on the twofold aspect of the Christian life is the outcome of special talks to Christian workers and others by an earnest Gospel teacher.

From the same.—'Thoroughness,' by the Rev. Thain Davidson, D.D. In this book are to be found more of those earnest and practical talks arising out of the writer's intercourse with young men. The deceased pastor's wise words, we trust, will prove helpful to many whose avocations demand 'thoroughness' for their future success.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trubner & Co.—'Poems and Plays,' by C. Whitworth Wynne. In this volume the author has gathered and published in a collected form the whole of his practical work 'which was worth preserving.' The poems are grouped under various heads, to which are added revisions of 'Ad Astra,' and of his Biblical drama, 'David and Bathshua,' with, in addition, 'Donna Marina,' a drama founded on the Conquest of Mexico. His conceptions bear the impress of a highly-cultured mind. The book has been issued by these publishers in a fitting form.

From Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.—'The Better Way,' by Charles Wagner. Translated from the French by Mary Louise Hendee. Short essays after the fashion of the author's earlier work, 'The Simple Life.' They are distinguished by great refinement of thought, lofty idealism, and beauty of expression.

From the same.—'Princess Joyce,' by Keighley Snowden. In this novel the author again displays with very happy effect his intimate knowledge of Yorkshire life, character, and scenery. The personality of the heroine is especially well portrayed, and she effectively stands out from a background chiefly composed of working people. The story is illustrated, and in view of its adaptability for presentation purposes attention may be called to the very tasteful binding.

From the same.—'George Macdonald: a Biographical and Critical Appreciation,' by Joseph Johnson. This will be found a light and readable account of the distinguished novelist and poet, though scarcely to be considered as completely adequate. Many by-paths of Macdonald's life, which promise a rich store of interest, are left comparatively uninvestigated, and the author for the most part has contented himself with the features lying on the surface. Where he strays from the beaten track, he pursues his wanderings to an excess. Macdonald's Manchester friends—Principal Scott, of Owens College, Henry Septimus Sutton, and so on—are treated of at a length quite disproportionate to the remainder of the volume; indeed, in reading the pages about Scott one wonders whether it is not a biography of that well-known scholar one has lit upon rather than a life of Macdonald. However, after a frank, unstudied fashion, the book presents a very faithful portrait of the Scottish author, whose physical appearance is excellently pictured in the frontispiece.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'Every Boy's Volume.' This comprises the first year's issue of a new magazine for boys, edited by G. A. Hutchinson. Two stories by Sir Conan Doyle deserve special notice, and an illustrated account of a summer holiday in Scilly, by Sir Frederick Treves, will interest both young and old. The Rev. Theodore Wood contributes several papers on Natural History, and there are also really clear instructions of how to make various articles, such as toboggans, stilts, &c. 'Cricket Don'ts,' by Lord Harris, originally written for schoolboys at Mangalore College, in India, we recommend to the close attention of all lovers of the game. The printing and general get-up of the volume is excellent, and we consider it distinctly above the average of most books of a similar nature.

From Messrs. John F. Shaw & Co.—'Heroes of the Empire.' This volume will bring joy to the heart of every boy who has a bit of the dare-devil in him. It contains enough battle, murder, and sudden death to keep him enthralled for many an hour. The stories are by various authors, amongst whose names we find those of Guy Boothby, Gordon Stables, and Captain Shaw. A series of articles by W. A. Atkinson, on British Sailors, contains interesting accounts of Sir John Fisher, Lord Charles Beresford, and such national heroes as Lord Nelson and Sir Sidney Smith. The numerous stories of adventure and heroism are well written and effectively illustrated, and the book is one that will arouse feelings of ardent patriotism in all who read it.

From Mr. A. Siegle.—'James McNeill Whistler,' by H. W. Singer; 'Jean François Millet, by Richard Muther. The 'Langham Series of Art Monographs,' so sympathetically edited by Selwyn Brinton, has now achieved a highly favourable reputation with those artistically inclined, and neither in the character of their subjects nor the insight shown in the matter of preparation are these later volumes likely to be less widely appreciated than their predecessors. Numerous illustrations in each case add to the value of the work.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The Foundations of Religion,' by John Boyd Kinnear. Originally delivered in a much expanded form as Sunday evening lectures in a rural parish, the contents of this volume will be found of signal service in removing those doubts which will at times assail even the most devout of religious believers. The work has apparently been published with the object of mainly benefiting those listeners who were present at the original lectures, in this way strengthening their memory of what was then more fully discussed, but there can be little doubt that it will also appeal to a large number of other readers.

From the Sunday School Union.—'The Royal Annual.' This volume is full of interesting things and good illustrations, and a word of praise must be given to the type, which is of unusual clearness, and calculated not to harm the eyes of any child who may pore over it in the long winter evenings. A series of articles upon Profitable Occupations for Girls, containing as it does such subjects as dispensing and gardening, is of exceptional value, and the papers upon religious subjects are treated in a way at once simple and yet not obvious. It is a book to delight young folk.

From the same.—'Ella the Saxon: a Story of the Early Days of Christianity in England,' by Johan M. Brebner; 'The Keeper of the Secret, a Story of Queen Mary's Days,' by Kitty Clive; and 'A Country Cousin,' by C. A. Mercer. These three illustrated books convey in the form of fiction excellent lessons and wholesome advice from the pages of history and daily life. From this publishing house comes to us also 'Jim Trelawny: a Story of Smuggling on the Cornish Coast,' written by Evelyn Everett-Green, with illustrations by E. A. Pike. The authoress has again, by her direct simple style and knowledge of boy nature, told a breezy story of adventure that will enchain the young reader's attention throughout.

From Mr. Philip Wellby.—'The Science of the Larger Life.' Two English students of the work of Ursula N. Gestefeld—a widely read American writer—have edited a selection of her essays under this somewhat comprehensive title. In rather vague and high-flown language are taught many elementary, and some complex, truths of life; indeed, the essays are outspoken sermons, with a vein of mysticism running through them. To a reader of refined tastes the style will probably prove irritating, for it is disjointed and full of mannerisms meant to rivet the attention. However, the substance of the book is sound, and may be commended. It is a pity the author has not derived from the loftiness of the subjects discussed something of their dignity and weight.

NEW EDITIONS.—From Mr. A. C. Fifield comes a copy of another edition, with new portraits, of 'Edward Carpenter: the Man and his Message,' by Tom Swan.—'Yes! or No!' by the late Brownlow North, B.A., is issued by Mr. Chas. J. Thynne in an attractive cover at a very cheap price; the little book has now reached its fifth edition.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

THE BIBLE for the YOUNG

A Series for Schools and Families

BY

REV. J. PATERSON SMYTH, B.D., LL.D., Litt.D.

Professor of Pastoral Theology, University of Dublin.

The Publishers desire to announce that the books of this series, either ready, or in preparation, are the following :—

1. GENESIS (reprinting).
2. MOSES AND THE EXODUS (ready).
3. JOSHUA AND THE JUDGES (ready).
4. ISRAEL'S PROPHETS AND KINGS.
5. ST. MATTHEW'S GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM (reprinting).
6. LIFE AND LETTERS OF ST. PAUL.
7. LIFE OF OUR LORD FROM THE FOUR GOSPELS.
8. THE PRAYER BOOK.

This series is intended not only for the use of parents with their children, but also for that of Sunday-school Teachers.

For the convenience of Sunday Schools each volume contains Twenty-four Lessons, which, with two Sundays for recapitulation, or with Two Lessons on Festivals or Prayer Book, &c., would fill up the half-year. Genesis and St. Matthew are bound together with Four Festival Lessons, or Four Lessons on the Prayer Book, making exactly Fifty-two Chapters for the year. Should any Diocese or Union of Sunday Schools combine in the same course of teaching, the publishers will bind any two volumes with the four extra Lessons as desired. There are different sets of extra Lessons.
